BI-CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

At a meeting of the Committee of the Second Church of Hartford, January 13th, 1870, it was unanimously decided to "appropriately celebrate the forth-coming bi-centennial anniversary of the establishment of this church." The following persons were chosen, as a Committee of Arrangements, to make all suitable preparation for the celebration, viz :

PETER D. STILLMAN,	CHARLES T. WEBSTER,
ASHBEL W. BARROWS,	MARSHALL JEWELL,
LOREN P. WALDO,	HENRY C. ROBINSON,
GEORGE S. GILMAN,	GEORGE W. MOORE,
FREDERICK R. FOSTER,	JONATHAN F. MORRIS,
EDWIN D. TIFFANY,	SAM. C. COLT,

THOMAS H. WELLES,	WILLIAM BLATCHLEY,
SAMUEL DODD,	EDWIN E. MARVIN.

GEORGE F. HILLS, CLERK.

Sub-committees, on invitations and public services, on church decorations, on entertainment, and on finance were appointed. More than one hundred letters of invitation were sent to different churches and distinguished gentlemen in various portions of the land, inviting them to be present and participate in our anniversary exercises. All the churches of all denominations in Hartford, were also specially and formally invited. A general invitation to "all persons who have ever, at any time, been members of this church or congregation," to be present at the celebration was widely published.

Among the churches that personally responded to the invitation, were those in Hartford, West Hartford, East Hartford, Windsor, and Wethersfield, the First Church in Middletown, the First Church in New London, the First Church in New Haven, the Church in Yale College, the Church in Farmington, the First Church and the Memorial Church in Springfield, the Old Church in Hadley, the Eliot Church in Roxbury, and the Tabernacle Church in New York City. Rev. Leonard Bacon, D. D., Rev. Horace Bushnell, D. D., Rev. Wm. Patton, D. D., Rev. Charles E. Linsley, and many others were present, as specially invited guests. Very grateful letters were received from the following gentlemen, who expressed their regret at being unable to be present, viz: Rev. Prof. A. Phelps, D. D., Rev. Pres. Samuel Harris, D. D., the Rt. Rev. J. Williams, Rev. W. B. Sprague, D. D., Rev. E. R. Beadle, Rev. C. D. Helmer, Rev. J. M. Manning, Rev. J. P. Thompson, D. D., Rev. Pres. T. D. Woolsey, D. D., Rev. Enoch Pond, D. D., Rev. Walter Clark, D. D., Rev. Pres. Joseph Cummings, D. D., Rev. Samuel Spring, D. D., Rev. H. P. Arms, D. D., and Rev. S. G. Buckingham, D. D.

Arrangements were made for services on Tuesday and Wednesday, February 22d and 23d, as follows: Tuesday afternoon, the Historical Address, by the Pastor of the Church. Tuesday evening, a social gathering and collation in the church parlors. Wednesday morning, at 9 1-2 o'clock, a prayer meeting; and at 10 1-2 o'clock, a Re-union in the church, with speeches and old-time singing. Wednesday afternoon, the Holy Communion. Wednesday evening, a closing discourse by Rev. O. E. Daggett. In the Good Providence of God, the two days on which our services were held, were delightfully clear and pleasant, and the spacious rooms of the church edifice were crowded at every meeting. To the arduous work of decorating the church, much time and toil had been given by many members of the congregation, and the result of their labors elicited universal admiration. The Hartford papers gave the following description of the decorations:

The church is a perfect bower of beauty. Along the sides of the galleries run festoons of laurel and pine, looped up at regular distanees over medallions containing the names of the former pastors of the church, and the date of their pastorate. The names are in brilliantly illuminated letters, and each is enclosed with a wreath of laurel. In front of the organ-loft the festoons are held by stars and crosses, and in the centre is a large lyre with strings of gold. The pillars are entwined with heavy wreaths, and large festoons hang from the center of the ceiling to the four corners. From the center hangs a heavy wreath ending in a large anchor and cross combined, emblematical of Faith and Hope. The gas brackets are festooned with laurel, and wreaths and crosses are over all the doors, and run over the cornices of the windows. The crowning glory is around the altar and pulpit. Here the large center window is filled in with a white panel, on which is written in large German text the original covenant, and the names of the original members of the church.

On one side of this is the Apostles' Creed, and on the other the Lord's Prayer, both framed with heavy wreaths of evergreen. Underneath the "Covenant" is the name of the present pastor: worked on a white ground, with immortelles of various colors.

On the pulpit stand two century plants, while pots of callas, camelias, carnations, and other blooming plants, are bestowed around with lavishness. The pulpit is festooned with evergreens, and in front of it stands a large white marble vase, filled with magnificent roses, heliotropes, orange blossoms, pinks, and other highly perfumed flowers, whose sweet incense rises heavenward and fills the sanctuary. The vase is surmounted with a cross composed of two hundred white rose buds, nestling amid green leaves. No more elegant or tasteful decorations have ever been seen in this city.

The public services began at two o'clock P. M., on Tuesday, and long before that hour the church was crowded in every part. The Rev. Charles Seymour, a member of the church, offered the prayer of invocation. A large choir of fine singers, under the direction of Mr. Irving Emerson, (organist of the church) sang the Te Deum. Rev. Dr. Field of New London read the 8th chapter of the book of Deuteronomy, and the 3d chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians. The choir then sang "Glorious things of thee are spoken." Rev. O. E.

NOTE.—Several fine photographic views of the interior of the church and its decorations were taken by Mr. E. P. Kellogg, of Hartford.

Daggett offered prayer. The hymn, "Christ is made the sure foundation," was sung. Then followed the Historical Address by Rev. E. P. Parker, after which the hymn, "The lovely form of God's own Church," was sung, and a brief prayer, ending with the benediction, was offered by Rev. J. Aspinwall Hodge, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Hartford, when the vast audience that for more than two hours had listened with no signs of weariness to the extremely interesting exercises, dispersed, not, however, without many hand-shakings, and cordial greetings, and congratulations, and mutual benedictions. In the midst of his discourse, Mr. Parker paused for a few moments and requested the whole congregation to rise and join with the choir in singing "Old Sherburne,"

"While Shepherds watched their flocks by night,"

The old strains touched many hearts, and wakened many sadly-sweet memories of long ago.

The discourse of the Pastor is herein published by the Committee of the Church. Large portions of it were necessarily omitted in delivery, but no part of the whole carefully prepared address could be left out in this publication. Of this discourse, the Committee of the Church fully believe what the Hartford Courant of Wednesday, February 23d, says of it:

"It will be a very valuable contribution to the Ecclesiastical history of the State; and it is fortunate for the church and the community that its preparation fell into such capable hands."

HISTORICAL DISCOURSE.

We are assembled in the House of God to-day, to celebrate the two-hundredth anniversary of the establishment of that branch of the Catholic Church which has its home and worship in this place.

The present members of this church and congregation, upon whom the Providence of God has laid the very pleasant duty of preparing for this bi-centennial jubilee, do most cordially welcome to the services of this celebration, all who have honored our Zion by coming hither to rejoice with us because of her. We pray you, join us in praising God for his gracious preservation and tender care of this church through two centuries, during which time the light of its testimony for "the faith once delivered to the saints," has not ceased somewhat to shine. Join us also in no less fervent prayers that in the years and ages of the future, this church may still abide steadfast in the Apostles' doctrine, and its light continue to shine more and more brightly unto that perfect day, when the glory of God shall cover the earth as the waters fill the sea.

In fulfilling the duty laid upon me, of preparing for this occasion some account of the origin and history of this church, I have chosen to refrain, for the most part, from sentimental reflections, which can be of no permanent value, and rather to give all diligence to the preparation of a strictly historical narrative. The difficulties to be encountered in the prosecution of this purpose may be the better appreciated when it is understood that there are no records of this Ecclesiastical Society, prior to the year 1767, in existence; nor any records of this church from the year 1731 to the year 1800. The church records from 1670 to 1731, are comprised in a fragment containing little else than an account of the organization of the church, and a list of admissions and baptisms. Concerning this ancient document, and the very important facts it reveals, I shall speak in due time. I hasten to gratefully acknowledge the valuable assistance I have received from the Hon. J. Hammond Trumbull, and from C. J. Hoadly, Esq., of this city. By the courtesy of Mr. Trumbull, I have had free use of copies of the "Lansdowne Manuscripts," which shed a flood of light upon the great controversy out of which this church (and several others as well, and among them the Old South Church in Boston,) grew, and which have but recently been brought forth from their strange hiding-place in the British Museum.^a

The Second Church in Hartford was organized on the 12th of February, (O. S.) 1669-70, or (N. S.) on the 22d of February, 1670. Its founders were very respectable men and women, who, with their children, withdrew from the First Hartford Church. The reasons for their withdrawal are found in certain dissensions that for a long time profoundly agitated, and finally divided the First Church.

For eleven years the Old Hartford Church flourished in great peace under the able and judicious ministry of Mr. Thomas Hooker, who, with Mr. Samuel Stone, the teaching Elder, led a flock of Christian people hither, through the wilderness, from Newtown, (Cambridge,) in the year 1636. Mr. Hooker died in 1647, universally lamented, and Mr. Stone,

^a These papers consist of various letters written in the time of the great controversy in the Hartford Church (1656-1660), by the different parties in the church, and by several distinguished ministers of New England, who took an active interest in the troubles here.

In the Second Volume of the Conn. Hist. Coll. (which is now in press, and will soon be published,) these valuable papers, together with others that bear on the same matter, may be found; Page 50, &c., &c.,—"Papers relating to the controversy in the church at Hartford."

In my numerous references to them, I shall mention that page of the volume on which the particular paper referred to begins. Thus "Lansd. Mss., page 54," means "Second Vol., Conn. Hist. Coll., page 54," on which page will be found that one of the Lansdowne papers to which reference is made.

the "Doctor Irrefragabilis," of whom Cotton Mather says:—"The foundation of New England had a precious gem laid in it when Mr. Stone arrived in these regions,"—was left alone in the ministry of the church here. Not many years had elapsed after Mr. Hooker's death, when a controversy arose in the church, having Mr. Stone and a majority of the brethren on one side, and a strong and respectable minority on the other side, the origin of which, says Mather, "has been rendered almost as obscure as the rise of the Connecticut river," and the consequences of which he likens to the annual inundations of the same river, "for it overspread the whole colony."^b These contentions had their roots deep in certain wide-spread diversities of opinion on several important ecclesiastical questions, but were greatly intensified and complicated by local jealousies and personal antagonisms. They continued unchecked by all means devised for their healing, waxing more and more serious, involving many churches far and near in their confusion, filling all New England with disputations, and resulted, at length, in the withdrawal of many members of the Hartford Church, some of whom, in 1659, removed up the river to Hadley where a settlement was made and a church was formed,^c and others, eleven years later, organized the Second Church at Hartford. Councils, Synods, and Courts ineffectually strove to extinguish this "fire of the altar," from which "there issued thunders and lightnings and earthquakes through the colony."^d The controversy was all the more deplorable as springing up in a church of "such eminence for light and love." The troubles in the Hartford Church had a deeper ground than any mere local or personal disagreements. They were the first public outbreaks of an inevitable general ecclesiastical controversy which had long been preparing in New England. Mr. Hooker, in his day, seems to have had vague apprehensions of coming troubles. "He would frequently intermix most affectionate warnings of the declensions which would quickly befall the churches of

New England." In 1650, Mr. Stone predicted that "the churches would come to be broken by schism, and sudden censures, and angry removes * * * in the churches, prayers against prayers, hearts against hearts, tears against tears, tongues against tongues, * * and horrible prejudices and underminings."^e There were certain glaring inadequacies of the prevalent ecclesiastical system and order, the popular feeling of which was greatly embittered by political considerations.^f There was an ultra-calvinistic theology at which Calvin himself would have stood aghast, which, having with difficulty repressed the Antinomianism for which it was chiefly responsible, soon found itself compelled to make some half-way provision for the people generally who desired to do all that was in their power towards God, but whom it was impossible to blame for not being regenerate, since they were literally like clay in the hands of the potter.* What could men and women do, from whom the gift of regeneration was in the sovereignty of God withheld, and to whom the arbitrary tests and evidences of regeneration were like high walls and barred gates around the Lord's Table, but promise a diligent use of the means of grace? And on promising this, should they not be admitted to the outer-court of the church, that under its nurture and discipline grace might perchance descend upon them, or at least upon their children? There was also, especially in Massachusetts and Connecticut colonies, a continual and baneful interference of the civil government with questions of church doctrine and discipline, which, under the plea of protection and support, wrought manifold and irremediable mischief. Under the ecclesiastical aristocracy that everywhere obtained in such a way as to subject all citizens to the burdens of taxation for the support of gospel institutions and ordinances, while only church members could have a voice or a vote in the election of church officers and ministers, a deep and general restlessness and discontent grew up. Added to these things, there was a party in the churches, and especially among the ministers, that was looking and planning and endeavoring for a national church system, or "parish way" of church extension and discipline.

Some local and personal differences at Hartford (for Mr. Stone had far more of the "flint-stone" than of the "load-stone" in "his management of principles,") afforded the weak spot on the quiet surface of this underlying confusion of conflicting principles, through which the serious dissatisfactions broke forth in force and fury to cover the colonies with disputations, and to subvert, at length, the old order of things in the churches. It is conceded by all who have investigated the matter, that the main points on which this controversy turned and proceeded, were "the new qualifications for baptism and church membership," and "the rights of the brotherhood."^g

In the second and third generations of the New England colonies, a condition of society was developed that clearly enough required some re-adjustment of the church order and discipline. The real necessity was not suspected; namely,—such a re-formation of dogmatic and especially of experimental theology as, a century later, Jonathan Edwards wrought. Both inside and outside the churches manifold complaints were expressed. Hitherto, according to almost universal custom, baptism had been administered to such believers only as gave credible evidence of regeneration and were judged fit to partake of the Lord's Supper, and to their children. But many of the elderly and godly men now saw with deep solicitude many of their children refraining from a profession of regeneration, and the children of these in turn, excluded from baptism.^h How to continue their posterity under the covenant of grace and within the pale of the church, and yet not endanger the purity of the church itself, was the problem.

Many of the children of the first settlers of the country who had now become parents, and also many recent immigrants who were not professedly regenerate, for several reasons,—partly owing to the undue if not superstitious importance they attached to the outward administration of baptism, and partly because they desired for themselves and their children the social and civil privileges of a church-standing, strove earnestly with those who were endeavoring to bring in a new practice that should allow not only communicants, but all baptized people of fair moral character, on owning the covenant, to offer their children in baptism.ⁱ This new practice involved also the right of such half-way members of the church to participate in the election of church officers, and the whole question was greatly complicated by grievances and demands of a political nature which it is impossible to set forth here.

Thus the question respecting the administration of baptism (involving many other serious questions also) became the great question on which all New England was for years profoundly agitated. A “new way” was advocated and urged.^j This “new way” was the beginning of what was subsequently known as the “half-way covenant,” and how utterly superficial and inadequate a remedy for the crying wants of the times it was, the history of its disastrous operation in the churches of New England during the next hundred years, abundantly shows. All accounts agree that this question first came prominently into dispute in the Hartford church.^k Rev. Mr. Stone was one of the earliest and warmest advocates of the reforming and enlarging measures. In 1650 he wrote to Richard Mather of Dorchester on the subject. Mr. Mather was very active in introducing the new practice, as many letters written to and by him, concerning it, show.^l A majority of the ^l For the letter of Mr. Stone, and for letters of Richard Mather, Mr. Prudden, and Mr. Rogers of Ipswich, on the subject, and for the action of the Dorchester

Hartford church sustained Mr. Stone. But a strong minority, comprising some of the most influential men in the town, having already disagreed with Mr. Stone on some points of discipline, resolutely resisted the innovations, as did also most of the churches in the colony.^m

As the controversy proceeded, and years of strife passed by, and councils, and synods, and courts took up the bitter troubles, the original grounds of difference became obscured, and secondary questions came into prominence.

For fourteen years the minority party stood in an attitude of dissent and remonstrance, yielding neither to the dictation of Mr. Stone, nor to the authority of two synods, nor to the powerful influence of the General Court, but always and incessantly pleading that they might be allowed to join other churches (Farmington or Wethersfield) where they could worship with a good conscience, or to form themselves into a distinct church.ⁿ It is quite certain that the breach through which all the after troubles found their way, was caused by the somewhat obstinate endeavor on the part of Mr. Stone to introduce the practice of some new principles of church order and discipline which were conceived, by a large minority of his people, to be innovations dangerous alike to the purity of the churches and to the old congregational way of church order. Mr. Stone defined Congregationalism as "a speaking aristocracy in the face of a silent democracy!" His ideas of church government "bordered more on Presbyterianism and less on independence, than those of the first ministers of the country in general."^o There is good reason for believing that these un-congregational ideas of Mr. Stone, together with his obstinate and rigorous persistence in enforcing them, had quite as much to do in dividing the church at Hartford, as the differences in opinion concerning baptism.

and Ipswich churches, consult Felt's Ecclesiastical History of N. E., Vol. 2, pages 38, 49, 88, 92, 135, 141. All agree that the practice they desire and urge is an entirely new one.

Just how, and in what precise forms the original misunderstandings first publicly appeared, is uncertain. One writer says that "the origin of them appears to have been a difference between the Rev. Mr. Stone and Mr. Goodwin, the ruling elder in the church, upon some nice points of Congregationalism. It seems some member had been admitted, or baptism administered, which Elder Goodwin conceived to be inconsistent with the rights of the brotherhood, and the strict principles of congregationalism."^p Hubbard says the first appearance of disturbance was on the occasion of the call of a minister to take Mr. Hooker's place, when it was proposed to give baptized non-communicants the right of voting in the election of a minister. "Some of the inhabitants, holding more strictly to the former principles of discipline, could not well bear it that any, in whose real piety they were not satisfied, (as not being confirmed members in the church,) should partake of any higher privileges, civil or ecclesiastical, than formerly belonged to non-members." "And not long after, there arose another difference in that colony, which was occasioned through the endeavours of some of their ministers for enlarging of baptism, and extending the right of membership to children before their admission into full communion."^q The same writer says explicitly, that these differences, that were first started in Connecticut, about the enlarging of baptism, ended in the dividing of some of the churches and congregations, and evidently refers to the Hartford church. It is certain, beyond all question, that the new way of "enlarging baptism" and of extending church-membership, although, under the authority of Synods and Courts and the pressure of a strong public sentiment, it gradually came into such favor that this Second Church, from the very first days of its existence, was ready or obliged to practice it, was a chief cause of the dissensions in the old Hartford church. These dissensions, as they proceeded through a course of years, outgrew the original questions in dispute, took hold of other points of difference, and perpetuated themselves in new, but no less angry forms.

I have thus touched the real, moving causes of that long and sad controversy out of which this church came into existence,—out of which, as it extended far and wide, several other distinct churches came forth. Of the manifold complications of that controversy in its several stages of development through fourteen years, there is no time or need to speak. Over against Mr. Stone and a majority of his church, a powerful and influential minority with whom most of the Connecticut churches heartily sympathized, stood steadfast for the liberty and purity of the churches, and for the old Congregationalism of Hooker and the Cambridge Platform, stoutly resisting those innovations that finally issued in the disastrous practice of what is well known in the history of the New England churches, as the “half-way covenant.”^r

I shall now, as briefly as possible, sketch the progress of the controversy in Hartford up to the date of the formation of the Second Church.

Hull’s Diary, (Boston, 1656,) relates: “Great breach of love and union in the church at Hartford last summer, which continued to the end of the winter now past, notwithstanding all endeavors there, and also by letters from hence, to have gained a reconciliation.” During the years 1654 and 1655, several local councils had endeavored to compose the troubles in the Hartford church, but their labors had proved fruitless.^s (1656.) In the month of March, 1656, some formal communications passed between the two parties in the church. Two letters from the dissenting party, signed by (Gov.) John

^r See Bacon’s Hist. Discourses, pages 108, 182; Cong’l Quarterly, July, 1862; Bacon’s Norwich Discourse, passim. It did not merely provide that baptized persons growing up in the bosom of the church with blameless characters, * * might offer their children for baptism without being required to be in full communion; but it also provided that such persons, as a condition preliminary to the baptism of their children, should make a certain public profession of faith and obedience, including a formal covenant with God and the church, which, at the same time, was understood as implying no profession of Christian experience! Here was a grave theological error hardening and establishing itself in the form of an ecclesiastical system. Webster, John Cullick, George Steele, Nathaniel Ward, Andrew Warner, John White, Thomas Bunce, and some fourteen others, and addressed to the church, are preserved.^t In the first of these letters, dated March 12th, these gentlemen say they have seriously considered what had been presented to them in certain papers received from Mr. Stone and several of the brethren, but have been unable to derive satisfaction therefrom. Their doubts and difficulties are on the whole increased. They cannot recognize Mr. Stone's official acts since he has "laid down his place," &c. &c.^u They entreat their brethren to forbear doing what will expose them to offensive or doubtful conduct, and urge the calling of a mutual and disinterested Council. If this be not granted, then they ask a dismissal, "the thoughts whereof in many respects is exceeding bitter to us, but any condition is better to us (though bitter) than that which doth expose us to sin." On the 18th, the church replied to this letter, but the reply is not found. On the 20th, the same dissenting brethren wrote to the church in answer to their paper of the 18th, protesting against an ex parte Council, and urging that a mutual Council be called, each party to nominate a certain number of Elders. They desire that the Council should be made up of gentlemen from the Connecticut and New Haven colonies. If such a Council cannot be agreed upon, then they desire dismissions to some approved church or churches of Christ, and instance the parting asunder of Paul and Barnabas when they could no longer walk together. They intimate that if neither of these requests be granted, then they shall be compelled to withdraw in some other way. On the 20th of May, the General Court, taking up the matter upon the presentation of grievancees, appointed a committee to advise with the Elders of the colony about the troubles, and to ask their help in drawing up an abstract of them to be presented to the General Courts of the United Colonies.^v

On the 11th of June, 1656, a Council of ministers of Connecticut churches, together with some from the colony of New Haven, was held in Hartford. It is quite certain that no churches of Massachusetts were represented in this Council, although Dr. Trumbull expresses a different opinion.^w John Davenport asserts that this Council was called by "the whole church at Hartford unanimously," the minority party yielding some of their scruples, and consenting to what the other party insisted upon.^x The result of this Council was decidedly in favor of the minority party, and they stood by it, and appealed to it.^y The other party refused to submit to its decision, and Mr. Stone several times afterwards referred to it in a contemptuous manner, declaring its result to be "cancelled and of no force."^z From John Davenport's letter to the church at Wethersfield, we learn that this Council decided that in case the difficulties should break out anew, the church should grant dismissions to the aggrieved brethren, and that Mr. Stone and his party violated their express agreement, and refused to abide by the decisions of the Council.^a A remarkable letter from John Higginson of Guilford confirms Mr. Davenport's assertions, gives an elaborate account of the whole matter, quite fully justifies the dissenting brethren, and severely condemns the obstinate course pursued by Mr. Stone.^b

These letters of Davenport and Higginson should be carefully perused by those who desire to look thoroughly into this whole affair.

In the month of August several distinguished Elders from Massachusetts—John Wilson, Richard Mather, Samuel Whiting, John Sherman, and John Norton—addressed a letter to Capt. Cullick and Mr. Goodwin at Hartford, designing through them to reach all the aggrieved brethren.^c They refer to the want of success of the late Council, and are unable "with longer silence to behold the wound of so famous a sister church and mother in Israel, still bleeding, if not ulcerating," &c. They propose a conference of all parties, at the Bay ; or if that may not be, they suggest their willingness to come to Hartford "for the obtaining of a conference between yourselves, Mr. Stone and them." "Suffer not Hartford's praise to become an occasion of Christ's prejudice! Alas! alas! so it is, besides this burning of yours, divers congregations amongst us, in this jurisdiction, are for the present as so many Meribahs and Taborahs, whose smoke we fear doth more than appear in the sight of the Canaanites." And so the lamentation continues until the reverend gentlemen cry out, "Our bowels! our bowels! we are pained at the very heart, we cannot hold our pen!" Again, in September, the Elders from the Bay addressed a letter to the church at Hartford,^d in which they say they cannot go to Hartford till Spring, and exhort the church in pathetic terms, to forbear action, and cultivate unity, and cover all matters of difference with silence until then.

The Committee appointed by the General Court in May, had meanwhile attended to their duty, made a report, and their questions had been forwarded to the Bay Court, together with a proposition for a Synod of Elders from all the colonies to consider several questions that concern the churches. Whereupon, in October (14), the Massachusetts General Court advised a General Council, and sent letters to the several Courts, desiring their ministers to meet in such a Council, at Boston, in June, 1657.^e

(1657.) So matters stood until on the 24th of February, 1656-7, the General Court of New Haven returned a spirited answer to this request, giving their opinions on the questions at issue, but declining to send their ministers to the Council. They were utterly opposed to the project, thought Connecticut ministers and legislature could settle their own troubles, and more than intimated that the proposed Council was set on foot by restless spirits who were determined to make serious changes both in civil government and in church discipline.^f

But Connecticut and Massachusetts were determined to have the Council. On the 26th of February, the General Court of Connecticut appointed four Elders (Warham of Windsor, Stone of Hartford, Russell of Wethersfield, and Blinman of New London) to attend the Council at Boston "on the 5th of June next, to confer and debate the questions formerly sent to the Bay Court, * * * with such divines as shall be sent to said meeting by the other colonies."^g Pending this proposed Synod at Boston, the Connecticut Court desired the Elders "who formerly transacted the differences in the Hartford church," (June 11, 1656,) to give a meeting to those Bay Elders who had previously offered to "come up hither."^h They also desired that the former Council (June, 1656) should be convened, to see if, in the interim, they could not compose the differences. Thus three distinct assemblings were proposed: 1st, an immediate re-convention of the Council of June, 1656; 2d, a conference of the two parties in Hartford with the neighboring Elders and with those Bay Elders who had offered their services; 3d, a General Council in Boston, on the 5th of June next.

Gov. Webster, Mr. Cullick, and Mr. Steele, who were of the dissenting party, stoutly objected to these propositions. They appealed to the Council of 1656, to which Mr. Stone and his party refused submission, and declared that so long as the wisdom and authority of its decisions were not successfully impeached, it was useless to call other Councils. They also objected to the imposition of a Council by legislative authority.*

On the 14th of March, the dissenting party addressed a letter to Mr. Stone and the church, in which the same sentiments that Gov. Webster and others had uttered in the General Court, were expressed. They set forth how after much condescension and self-denial they had "obtained a Council of persons suiting and answering your propositions and desires." They refer to the fact that this same Council "concurred with us and strengthened our thoughts." They beseech their brethren to yield to that counsel that is already given, or else, "grant us our dismission, * * that so both you and we may be in a capacity to enjoy the good things of Christ asunder, which we have now so long time been deprived of in our being together."ⁱ

On the 6th of April, John Norton and other Elders and messengers of the Bay churches, set out from Boston for Hartford, "to endeavor a reconciliation amongst them in those parts, for their breach hath been the occasion of much division in sundry churches in these parts." The Boston church observed the 16th of April as a day of fasting and prayer for the Hartford church.

On the 23d of April, letters came from Hartford to Boston, saying that "the work of reconciliation went very slowly forward."^j On the 6th of May, Mr. Norton returned to Boston, bringing word "that the Lord had graciously wrought the church at Hartford to a re-union, and a mutual promise to bury all former differences in silence for the future." This pacification was superficial and short-lived.

It is worthy of remark that during the sessions of this Conference at Hartford in April, 1657, at the desire of John Eliot, who was present from Roxbury, the Podunk Indians were assembled that he might preach the Gospel to them. Mr. Eliot preached to them, and asked them if they would accept Christ as their Saviour. But their chief men replied with great haughtiness that they would adhere to their own religion.^k

In the month of June (4-19) the General Council or Synod met at Boston, and discussed the questions previously propounded by the Court of Connecticut. The result of their deliberations, drawn up by Richard Mather of Dorchester, was published two years afterward in England, and was entitled, "A disputation concerning church-members and their children, in answer to twenty-one questions."¹ When it is remembered that these questions came from Connecticut, and were drawn up as the heads of the troubles in the churches there, and especially in the Hartford church, all doubt as to the real roots of the difficulties in the Hartford church vanishes. A copy of these questions and answers was formally presented to the Court of Connecticut by Mr. Stone, and they were then distributed among the churches.^m In their answer to the tenth of the twenty one questions, this Synod gave an endorsement of the half-way covenant notion. The result was, not the reconciliation, but the greater disturbance and division of the churches. Most of the churches regarded it as an innovation of most dangerous nature, and violently opposed it.ⁿ Especially in Hartford, the church was thrown into greater contentions than ever. The dissenting party, comprising some of the most influential men both in the town and in the church, having exhausted all means of procuring letters of regular dismission proceeded to withdraw from the church, with a view to joining the church at Wethersfield. Whereupon Mr. Stone instituted disciplinary proceedings against some of them.* In November the withdrawers addressed the church in a letter, dated the 11th day, in which they declared, "that having long lived in the fire of contention, using and seeking means to the utmost that we might have quenched the flame, * * * and we, finding ourselves scorched more and more therewith, have been forced by Mr. Stone's breaking of our pacification, after all other trouble, to flee from that which we could neither quench nor bear."^o The grounds of their withdrawing were enclosed in a paper dated October 26th, which is not found. This declaration was published and read in several churches.^p

On the 4th of December nine gentlemen of Mr. Stone's party issued a "presentment" to the General Court, of the offences of the withdrawers, characterizing their late declaration as "a defamation of Mr. Stone and the church at Hartford," accusing them as utterly unreasonable in their withdrawing, and invoking the interference of the civil authority to prohibit them from removing from the church.^q

It is noteworthy that two of the nine men who subscribed this presentment—George Stocking and George Graves—were afterwards among the original members of the Second Church. In the same month the withdrawers wrote to Governor Eaton and Rev. John Davenport of New Haven, stating their grievances.^r It appears that there had been proceedings before the governor and the magistrates, and a bitter contention was raging.

(1658.) In the month of February, 1657-8, the withdrawers sent a circular letter to the churches, in which they announced that they had propounded themselves to the Wethersfield church for communion with them.^s On receiving their application, the Wethersfield church asked advice of other churches as to whether these withdrawers from Hartford might be properly received by them. John Davenport of New Haven, sent a long and important answer, in which he states the case of the withdrawers with great adroitness, justifies their action, is severe upon Mr. Stone, and declares that his church will stand by Wethersfield church if they shall receive the Hartford brethren.^t John Higginson of Guilford, also made reply. His letter is a very able and admirable one.^u It is a complete and intelligent justification of the withdrawing brethren, and reflects severely upon Mr. Stone's obstinate conduct. "The dissenting brethren have submitted to the judgment of the Council in both parts of it. * * * Mr. Stone and the church there have not submitted to the judgment of the Council in either part of it. * * * This opposition to the Council by Mr. Stone hath been the blameable cause of the continuance, and increase, and multiplying of those contentions and disorders that have been since the Council, as also it hath given such * * * a wound to the Congregational way, that except Mr. Stone's repentance for it be as publickly known as his sin in so doing," &c. "I see not where the dissenting brethren are to be blamed for desiring this dismissal, but Mr. Stone and the church are to be blamed for not granting their dismissal."

The church at Hartford had not appealed to the civil authority in vain. In the month of March (11th) the General Court ordered that no persons in their jurisdiction should in any way imbody themselves into church estate without the consent of the Court and the approbation of the neighboring churches. It was also ordered that the Hartford church should cease from all further prosecution against the withdrawers, and the withdrawers were forbidden to prosecute their propositions to join the Wethersfield church or any other church.^v The elders of the colony were desired to meet the Court on the 24th of March, to assist in devising some means for settling the troubles. This wretched but peremptory interference of the civil authority wrought only mischief. It prohibited the minority party from either forming themselves into a new church, or from joining other churches, and shut them up under a church rule and in a church relation that had become simply intolerable. It postponed the organization of the Second Church twelve years, and sent some of the best men of the town up the river to Hadley.

In May, Captain Cullick and Elder Goodwin petitioned the Massachusetts General Court for the grant of a plantation, purposing to remove, with others, out of the jurisdiction of Connecticut. Their petition was granted.^w

In the month of August the Court ordered the two parties to state their differences in writing, and discuss them. Failing to agree, then they were each to choose three elders, whose decision, after a full hearing, was to be final. If either party refused to choose, then the Court would choose for them. The withdrawers accepted the proposition, and chose Mr. Davenport, Mr. Norton, and Mr. Fitch. The church refused to choose, and the Court chose for them.^x These elders were requested to meet in Hartford by the 17th of September. The questions for disputation were drawn up by Mr. Stone, on his part, in his most aggravating style,^y but the whole endeavor fell through, as Dr. Trumbull says, by the fault of the church.^z

(1659.) In March, 1658-9, the General Court took measures for convening another Council on the 3d day of June.^a On the 18th of April the withdrawers and their friends met at Goodman Ward's house in Hartford, and signed an engagement to remove themselves and their families into Massachusetts.^b

On the 3d of June, according to previous appointment, a Council of elders and messengers from Boston, Cambridge, Charleston, Ipswich, Dedham, and Sudbury, convened at Hartford, whose endeavors for peace were so far encouraging, that the Court requested its members, and in addition thereto, the elders and messengers of Dorchester and Watertown churches, to be present at another Council in Hartford on the 19th day of August.^c Dr. Trumbull is quite certainly mistaken in saying that this Council assembled again in Hartford at the appointed time. It came together, not in Hartford on the 19th of August, but in Boston, on the 26th of September. Both the Hartford parties appeared by their representatives. The result was blessed with what was supposed to be a sweet re-union, and satisfaction to both parties.^d In view of this

John Wilson and others for the Boston church, and John Eliot and Isack Gooch for the Roxbury church, wrote to the General Court of Connecticut, declining the service, for the reasons that neither of the two parties in Hartford had asked them to come, and because they believed that such a Council would have no weight and do no good. good result, the General Court of Connecticut proclaimed a day of public thanksgiving throughout the colony.^e

For several years there seems to have been a good degree of peace in Hartford. Many of the withdrawing party had removed out of Connecticut; some of either party had left this world, and the Council of 1659 in Boston effected a considerable, though not a thorough pacification.

(1660.) In 1660, Mr. John Whiting was ordained as colleague of Mr. Stone in the Hartford church.

(1662.) Concerning the famous Synod which was held in Boston, in 1662, to affirm more explicitly and authoritatively the decisions of the Synod of 1657 respecting church members and baptism, and which, after many sessions, sanctioned and authorized the half-way covenant, there is no special occasion for remark here. The two questions there discussed and answered, were, (1st,) "who are the subjects of baptism?" and (2d,) "whether, according to the word of God, there ought to be a consociation of churches, and what should be the manner of it?" So much opposition had been manifested among the churches to the new measures for enlarging baptism, and effecting a strong church government, that this Synod was called as necessary to the authorization and establishment of the reforming principles.^f

(1663.) On the 20th of July, 1663, Mr. Samuel Stone departed this life, after "feeding the flock of our Lord fourteen years with Mr. Hooker, and sixteen years after him."^g

(1664.) Mr. Joseph Haynes began his ministry in Hartford, as the colleague of Mr. Whiting, in 1664. Both these

The long result of this Council, drawn up, doubtless, by the able hand of Jonathan Mitchell, has been, until recently, in manuscript among the "Hutchinson papers," in the Massachusetts Historical Society. I am spared the necessity of giving any abstract of it here, for the entire "Result" will soon appear in the pages of the 2d vol. Conn. Hist. Coll. See page 112, and the note by J. H. Trumbull.

^f For the history of this Synod whose results newly inflamed the churches, the reader is referred to an able article by Dr. H. M. Dexter, in the Congregational Quarterly, July, 1862, and to Mather's Magnalia, Vol. 2: 279.

^g Life of Mr. Stone in Mather's Magnalia, Vol. 1: 434. It is said that Hartford was named after the birth-place of Mr. Stone. In a "Threnodia upon our churches' second dark eclipse, happening July 20, 1663, by death's interposition young men were the sons of distinguished gentlemen who were among the first settlers of Hartford. Whiting was about twenty-nine years of age, and Haynes was six years younger. Mr. Whiting held to the old ways, and was the representative of the former dissenting or withdrawing party in the church. Mr. Haynes was a "large" Congregationalist, accepted the doctrines of the Synod of 1662 and especially its consociation theories, and his party, in the subsequent divisions, was known as the Presbyterian party. He was, moreover, a zealous man in his ways, and between him and Mr. Whiting differences and disputes soon arose. During this same year, the General Court, stirred up by sundry petitions of some who were aggrieved that they were not admitted to church fellowship, made an effort to enforce the practice of the Synodical principles upon the churches of the colony.^b But many of the churches, indeed most of them, still resisted the innovations, though it is evident that they were gradually compelled by the pressure of a very strong public sentiment supported by the authority of the highest civil and ecclesiastical tribunals, to suffer and accept the half-way covenant practice. That this was the case in Hartford, and at a much earlier date than has commonly been supposed, I shall by and by prove by facts hitherto unknown to writers on this subject.

(1666.) While the project of uniting the two colonies of New Haven and Connecticut was under discussion, the civil authorities paid little attention to ecclesiastical matters, but after the consummation of that union, the General Court made another effort to settle the troubles that were rife in many plantations. A hot dispute had arisen in the Hartford

Church. There was an open rupture between the two ministers.

A letter from John Davenport to Governor Winthrop,ⁱ dated June, 1666, reveals a sad condition of things. "The people grow woefully divided, and the better sort are exceedingly grieved, while the looser and worser party insult, hoping that it will be as they would have it, viz: that the plantations shall be brought into a parish way." Mr. Haynes, when it was his turn to preach, sent three of his party to tell Mr. Whiting that on the next lecture-day he would preach about his way of baptizing, and begin the practising of it on that day. Mr. Whiting testified against it, and refused his consent. A stormy meeting was held. The aged Mr. Warham of Windsor attempted to speak, but was rudely silenced. The two ministers arranged for a public dispute, the result of which is unknown, but Mr. Haynes and "his way of baptizing," which gave great offence to many, were in the majority, and the "congregational way," was seriously compromised by his conduct. A Synod, or Assembly as it was afterwards called in deference to the prejudices of many, of all the elders and ministers in the colony was appointed for the third Wednesday in May, 1667. Four ministers from Massachusetts (and among them was Mr. Mitchell, the ablest advocate of the reforming measures) were to participate in the assembly.^j A series of seventeen questions, substantially the old ones of 1657, were drawn up for discussion. The object of this council was to prepare the way for the more willing and general reception by the Connecticut churches of the measures sanctioned by the Synod of 1662. The assembly of ministers convened according to appointment, and after some discussion adjourned until autumn. But they never met again. As it seemed likely that they would not agree in endorsing the Synod principles, measures were taken to prevent their re-assembling.^k

mittee of four eminent divines, "to consider of some expedient for our peace, by searching out the rule and thereby clearing up how far the churches and people may walk together within themselves and one with another, in the fellowship and order of the Gospel, *notwithstanding some various apprehensions among them in matters of discipline respecting membership and baptism.*¹

This is the first gleam of light! Something like sense and wisdom at length appears in the ecclesiastical intermeddling of the Court, and it is not unlikely that this is to be attributed to the good judgment of Governor Winthrop.

(1669.) After this aforementioned committee had made their report, and in accordance with its wise suggestions, the General Court in May, 1669, declared that while the Congregational churches should still be countenanced and approved in their profession and practice, yet, "to persons of worth for prudence and piety amongst us who are otherwise persuaded, * * * allowance of their persuasion and profession in church ways or assemblies should be given, without disturbance."^m

This most important order of toleration was a virtual repeal of the act of March, 1658, forbidding separate church assemblies, &c. The long-looked for way was now clearly open to the minority in the Hartford Church to organize themselves in a distinct estate. Without delay their petition for liberty to form a new church was presented, and in October, the General Court directed the Hartford Church "to take some effectual course" that Mr. Whiting and his party "might practice the congregational way without disturbance either from preaching or practice, diversely to their just offence, or else to grant their loving consent to these brethren to walk distinct, according to such their congregational principles."ⁿ In the vote for this written order, four magistrates and fourteen deputies dissented. Hartford was now to have a second church. No other town in New England, save Boston, had as yet more than one church. "This winter," says Bradstreet's journal, "Hartford Church divided, Mr. Whiting and his party refusing to hold communion with Mr. Haynes. *

* * Mr. Haynes and those with him being looked upon as Presbyterians."^o The new order of toleration cut both ways, for within a month from the time when the Second Church in Hartford was formed, the party in the church at Windsor that dissented from the strict congregationalism of old Mr. Warham, embraced their opportunity, and withdrew, and in March, (1669-70,) Mr. Woodbridge was ordained as minister of the "Presbyterian party" of Windsor.

On the 22d of February, 1670, (N. S.) Mr. John Whiting the senior pastor, with thirty-one members of the Hartford Church and with their families, formed the Second Church in this town. A full account of this transaction is contained in a paper which was read before the council on that day. "Having had the consent and countenance of the General Court, and the advice of an ecclesiastical council to encourage us in embodying as a church by ourselves, accordingly, upon the day of completing our distinct estate, (viz: Feb. 12th, 1669,) this paper was read before the messengers of the churches, and consented to by ourselves, viz: P

"The holy providence of the Most High so disposing, that public opposition and disturbance hath of late years been given both by preaching and practice to the Congregational way of church order, by all manner of orderly establishments settled, and for a long time unanimously approved and peaceably practiced in this place; all endeavors also (both among ourselves and from abroad) with due patience therein, proving fruitless and unsuccessful to the removing of that disturbance; we whose names are after mentioned, being advised by a council of the neighbor churches, and allowed also by the Honored General Court, to dispose ourselves into a capacity of distinct walking in order to a peaceable and edifying enjoyment of all God's holy ordinances; we do declare, that according to the light we have hitherto received, the forementioned Congregational way (for the substance of it) as formerly settled, professed and practiced, under the guidance of the first leaders of this church of Hartford, is the way of Christ, and that as such we are bound in duty carefully to observe and attend it until such further light (about any particular points of it) shall appear to us from the Scripture as may lead us with joint or general satisfaction to be otherwise persuaded. Some main heads or principles of which Congregational way of church order are those that follow, viz:

"FIRST, That visible saints are the only fit matter, and confederation the form, of a visible church.

"SECOND, That a competent number of visible saints (with their seed) embodied by a particular covenant, are a true, distinct, and entire church of Christ.

"THIRD, That such a particular church being organized, or having furnished itself with those officers that Christ hath appointed, hath all the power and privileges of a church belonging to it; in special—1st, to admit or receive members; 2d, to deal with, and if need be reject, offenders; 3d, to administer and enjoy all other ecclesiastical ordinances within itself.

"FOURTH, That the power of guidance or leading, belongs only to the Eldership, and the power of judgment, consent, or privilege, belongs to the fraternity or brethren in full communion.

"FIFTH, That communion is carefully to be maintained between all the churches of Christ, according to his order.

"SIXTH, That counsel in cases of difficulty is to be sought and submitted to according to God.

"The Covenant read and consented to the same day, was as followeth:

"Since it hath pleased God, in his infinite mercy, to manifest himself willing to take unworthy sinners near unto himself, even into covenant relation to and interest in him, to become a God to them and avouch them to be his people, and accordingly to command and encourage them to give up themselves and their children also unto him:

"We do therefore this day, in the presence of God, his holy angels, and this assembly, avouch the Lord Jehovah, the true and living God, even God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, to be our God.

and give up ourselves and ours also unto him, to be his subjects and servants, promising through grace and strength from Christ, (without whom we can do nothing,) to walk in professed subjection to him as our only Lord and Lawgiver, yielding universal obedience to his blessed will, according to what discoveries he hath made or hereafter shall make of the same to us ; in special, that we will seek him in all his holy ordinances according to the rules of the gospel, submitting to his government in this particular church, and walking together therein with all brotherly love and mutual watchfulness, to the building up of one another in faith and love unto his praise : all which we promise to perform, the Lord helping us through his grace in Jesus Christ.

“Those that consented to the above written covenant upon the day mentioned, were,

These “children of the church,” “members not in full communion,” not only came forward to “own the covenant,” but some of them were married people who immediately thereafter brought their children to baptism, as will be shown.

On the same day the church chose Mr. Whiting for their pastor, and upon his acceptance he was immediately “re-ordained” with prayer and the imposition of hands by the Rev. Joseph Elliot and the Rev. Nath'l Collins,* the other messengers of the churches approving what was done by affording the right hand of fellowship. list of original members is Anne Cole. But Anne Cole had a sad distinction in her earlier days, as a letter of her pastor, dated December, 1682, informs us.⁴ In the year 1662, she, then living in her father's house, was taken with strange fits, wherein her tongue was improved by a demon in most wonderful ways, so that she even talked in Dutch to the astonishment of Mr. Stone and other godly men who strove to relieve her. Finally, after a poor, old, ugly, ignorant (and probably crazy) woman had confessed herself in covenant with Satan, and had been hung together with her husband, and several Dutch people had evinced their guilt by obstinately floating in water (instead of sinking in it as all innocent people should do,) and had fled the country, poor Anne Cole had abatement of her sorrows, became a sensible woman, married Andrew Benton, became a good christian, helped form this good old church, obtained a good report, and doubtless died in peace, in due time.

In another letter (October, 1683,) Mr. Whiting gives a pathetic account of the tragical end of the son of Rev. Samuel Stone. He was a man of fine gifts and culture, and was educated for the ministry, but fell into a "course of notorious drunkenness." On the 9th of October, 1683, early in the morning, he was found dead "in the little river that runs through the town of Hartford." In the darkness of the night, after a day of dissipation, his uncertain feet had missed the bridge, he had fallen down upon the rocks, rolled into the water, "and there lay dead at break of day." In another letter, (October, 1682,) Mr. Whiting mentions a fearful sickness that prevailed in Hartford at that time, one of the numerous victims of which was Rev. Isaac Foster, successor of Mr.

Haynes in the First Church, and cut off in the second year of his pastorate.^r

Not long since a small, dingy, closely written manuscript was discovered in an old trunk belonging to a Seymour family, which on examination proved to be a fragment of the early records of this church, containing little else, however, than a list of admissions to the church, and also a list of children baptized in the church, from the beginning down to the year 1731. It was evidently prepared during the ministry of Mr. Buckingham, with great care to make the list of admissions and baptisms as complete as possible. A careful study of this document has enabled me to correct and fix several dates of importance, to learn the names of several deacons of the church in its earlier days, and to state with certainty several interesting facts concerning the condition of the church during the first sixty years of its history.

In March, 1677, Mr. John White (he was one of the original withdrawers who went to Hadley, and returned to Hartford in 1671) was chosen and ordained to the office of Ruling Elder, "in the presence and with the approbation of the elders and messengers of some neighbor churches." "This holy man, having faithfully served the Lord in his place, and that also with good success through grace, (He was a good man and God was with him) fell asleep in Christ, and went to receive his reward, January, 1683," (1683-4).^s

"March 24, 1685-6. The church and the children of it renewed the covenant, as may be seen in the form of it written in a loose sheet among the papers belonging to the church."^t The names of sixty-eight persons who were received into full communion during Mr. Whiting's ministry, are on record. Twenty-five persons were so received in 1678. During the same period about two hundred and sixty children were baptized. Their names, their parents' names, and the exact date of their baptism are now known.

^r Mr. Haynes died in 1679. Mr. Foster was settled over the old church in 1680, and died in 1682.

^s Old church records.

^t Frequent reference is made in the fragment here quoted, to other and fuller church records that have perished.

Dr. Trumbull, in his Hist. of Conn., (Vol. 1: 497) says that the practice of owning the covenant did not obtain in the churches of Conn. Colony until the year 1696, and was first introduced by Mr. Woodbridge, (third minister of the old church) at Hartford. This is a mistake. The practice alluded to was observed in the Hartford churches nearly thirty years earlier than he supposes.

A comparative examination of the lists of persons received to this church and of the children baptized in it, contained in the old records already alluded to, reveals the fact that the half-way covenant was practised in the Second Church of Hartford from the very first. And it must have been previously practised for some time in the old church. The new way of baptism came gradually to be tolerated, and allowed, and accepted after the Synod of 1662. Resistance to it was overcome by the pressure of a public sentiment that rapidly grew to be overwhelmingly in its favor. Among the thirty-six "children of the church" who on the day this church was formed, "personally owned the covenant," though not in full communion, were several people of mature years, and some married people.

Of these, Lydia Smith brought her child to be baptized within a month of the time she had owned the covenant. Her child was the second one baptized in this church.

John Seamer, John Eston, Thos. Bunce, Jun'r, Stephen Hosmer, John Marsh, were all "children of the church," "members not in full communion," who "personally owned the covenant" on the day the church was organized, and who, within a few months time, had children baptized in the church.

Following out the records carefully, we find that these baptized children of non-communicants, so soon as they came to be parents, hastened to "own the covenant" and present their children for baptism, most of them never coming into full communion. It is a significant fact that these ownings of the covenant almost invariably occur in connection with the baptism of children. The record often reads—"A. B. admitted to a state of adult membership on owning the covenant, and his children baptized the same day." As a general rule, the half-way covenanters never got more than half-way into the church. The font was taken from its place by the communion table and placed in the vestibule, and an outer-court church thronged with people bearing infant children in their arms to be baptized, was perpetuated. Mr. Whiting's brother and his son also were among these half-way covenanters. It may seem strange that the men who strove so long in the old church against the new ways, should so soon and so easily have received this practice. But fourteen years had made great changes, had shifted the original grounds of controversy somewhat, and had given rise to a public opinion on the subject that, supported as it was by the highest authorities, was irresistible.

George Grave, who died in 1673, was probably the first deacon of this church. Stephen Hosmer was a deacon of the church in 1687; John Wilson, in 1688, and Daniel Merrels, in 1714. Joseph Easton, who died in 1711, John Merolds and Thomas Bunce, both of whom died in 1712, were also deacons. It is probable that Paul Peck, who died in 1695, and Samuel Smith, who died in 1707, filled the same office.

There were goodly families in those days. Rev. Mr. Whiting was the father of fourteen children, having had seven by each of his two wives. His son, Lieut. Charles Whiting was twice blessed with twins. Thomas Dickinson had at least ten children; Mr. Nath'l Standly had eleven; John Cole brought his seventh daughter to be baptized, and several children afterward; Mr. Richard Lord had nine children; John Marsh had ten; and John Turner had twelve.

Concerning Rev. Mr. John Whiting, the first pastor of this church, Cotton Mather said, "He will never be forgotten till Connecticut Colony do forget itself, and all religion." He was the second son of Maj. William Whiting who was one of the original settlers of Hartford, a man of wealth and influence, a magistrate and treasurer of the colony. John Whiting was born in 1635, graduated at Harvard in 1653, preached for some time (1658) at Salem, came to Hartford and was settled as colleague of Mr. Stone in 1660, became pastor of the Second Church in February, 1669-70, in which office he continued till his death, September 8th, 1689. His first wife was Sybil Collins, daughter of "a good old man called (Edward) Collins, the deacon of the church at Cambridge."^u Her seventh and last child was baptized only two months after the organization of this church, and she died soon after, for in 1673, Mr. Whiting took for a second wife Phebe Gregson, of New Haven, as the baptism of her first child in November, 1674 shows. Mr. Whiting's fourteenth and last child, and the seventh by his second wife, was baptized in June, 1688, about a year before his father's death.

In the year 1675, Mr. Whiting accompanied the Connecticut troops under Maj. Treat, in the Indian war, as Chaplain.^v His son, Col. William Whiting, was an experienced and able officer, and commanded the Connecticut troops sent to Port Royal in 1710. Mr. Whiting preached an election sermon, May 13th, 1686, entitled, "The Way of Israel's Welfare," a copy of which is preserved in the Historical Society of Hartford.^w

When the first meeting house of this society was erected is not known, but its location has been ascertained. In January, 1705-6, the widow of Maj. Jonathan Bull (she was Mr. Whiting's daughter) conveyed to Nath'l Standly, Richard Lord, Thomas Bunee and others, "for the accommodation of making some enlargement to the South Meeting House," a small parcel of land.^x The exact dimensions and boundaries of this strip of ground are given in the conveyance. The location and boundaries of Maj. Bull's house lot are also known, and ^u Two of this good man's sons were "famous persons in their generation." Nath'l Collins was the much esteemed minister at Middletown. John Collins was a celebrated preacher in London, and the chaplain of Gen. Monk when he went from Scotland to England.

^v Conn. Col. Rec., Vol. 2 : 356 8.

^w It is likely that Mr. Whiting fell a victim to the epidemic sickness that prevailed in August and September throughout the colony, and on account of which the General Court was unable to meet in August. Secretary Allen wrote to Gov. Bradstreet, Aug. 9, 1689: "It is a very sickly time in most of our plantations, in some, two-thirds of our people are confined to their beds or houses, and it is feared some suffer for want of tenderness amongst us, and the great drought begins to be very afflictive." Also Sept. 4,—"The sickness is indeed very sore in most of our towns." Conn. Col. Rec., Vol. 4 : 1, Note.

so the data necessary for reckoning the position of the old meeting house are given. It was a small and unsightly building, and stood on the east side of Main Street, between Little River and the south corner of Main and Sheldon Streets, in the highway.¹

Each Lord's day the people of Hartford town came together for worship in the meeting house at nine o'clock in the morning, and at two o'clock in the afternoon.² The morning service began with a prayer, after which a chapter of the Scriptures was read and expounded. Then a Psalm was sung, the Ruling Elder lining the Psalm. The sermon was then preached from notes only, and the service was concluded with a prayer and a blessing. Mr. Warham of Windsor, is said

¹ Hartford Rec. Deeds 1 : 397. A dim tradition has located this building several rods further south, near the house of Mrs. Albert W. Butler, and I have been told that when the Butler house was built, what were supposed to be the foundations of the old meeting house were discovered. Some persons whose opinions on the matter are entitled to great weight still believe that this tradition is well founded. It may be. It is certain, however, that the meeting house stood on the east side of Main Street, somewhere between Little River and the house of Mrs. Albert W. Butler. The opinion given in the text is that of Mr. J. Hammond Trumbull, and the evidence therefor is as follows:—The strip of land conveyed by Mrs. Bull was about fifty feet long, and fifteen feet broad, and was bounded east and south by her house lot, west by a street or highway, (Main St.,) and north by the meeting house yard. The meeting house then stood on the east side of Main St., and north of Maj. Jonathan Bull's house lot. Maj. Bull's house lot was the north half of a lot extending from Sheldon St. to Charter Oak Avenue, on Main St. In all conveyances of this lot, which was originally laid out to Andrew Bacon, it is bounded north on the highway,—that is, by the road along the south bank of Little River. Now, as Mrs. Bull's conveyance of a strip of land off the north side of her house lot, bounds it north by the meeting house yard, the location of the meeting house would seem to have been between Little River and the south corner of Main and Sheldon Sts., or hard by what is now Harbison's Store. Near by, on Main St., somewhere between Little River and College St., stood a School House which was built about 1666.

² Hartford had a town-crier and bell-ringer as early as 1641, at least, and in 1643, the town ordered "a bell to be rung by the watch every morning, an hour before daybreak," and "that there should be in every house, one up and have made some light within, one-quarter of an hour after the end of the bell-ringing."—J. Hammond Trumbull, note to Lechford's Plaine Dealing.

When the Second Church was formed, there was an agreement between the two Societies that they should have a joint property and interest in the bell which was to hang on the meeting house of the old church. In 1725, the bell was cracked or broken so as to be useless.

Dec. 19, 1726, the First Society directed Mr. John Edwards at the charge of

to have been the first minister in New England, who made a practice of reading fully written sermons. The afternoon service was opened with prayer, then a psalm and another prayer, then the sermon and a prayer. Then baptism was administered, and if we may judge from what took place in this church, there were baptisms nearly every Sunday in the churches, in those days. Then the deacon rose in his seat and announced the contribution, whereupon the principal men first, then the elders, then the people generally came forward to the Deacon's seat where their offerings of various descriptions were deposited. Some curious orders of the Courts show that there were people in the good old times mean enough to palm off worthless articles on such occasions under the pretence of benevolence. There were no fires in the sanctuary. Directly in front of the pulpit and facing the congregation sat the Ruling Elder in an elevated seat, and in front of him, somewhat lower, sat the deacons. The pews were "dignified," and the pew nearest the pulpit on the right, was usually assigned to the minister.

The delicate and difficult duty of "seating the meeting house," was not performed without occasioning much jealousy and ill-feeling. Men and women were seated separately on opposite sides of the house, according to their office, age, or social rank, while the children were gathered by themselves in such a manner as to require special supervision to keep them in good behavior.*

Mr. Whiting was succeeded by the Rev. Thomas Buckingthe Society, to purchase some suitable red bunting for a flag to be set up on the State House to direct for meeting upon the public worship of God. In 1727, both societies agreed in levying a rate of 80 pounds for recasting the bell. Hezekiah Wyllis for the First Church, and Capt. Nathaniel Stanly for the Second Church, were to see to it, &c.

As it had been agreed that the bell should hang in the old meeting house until the major part of both societies shon'd agree to hang it elsewhere, when, in 1737, the First Society came to build a new meeting house, they claimed and asked the Second Society to bear their share of the expense of the new steeple in which to hang the common bell. (First Ecc. Soc. Rec.)

*Dec. 25, 1716, voted by the First Church, that all the boys under 16 years old shall sit below, some in the guard seats and some in the alley. Sam'l Shepard and Tho. Day to sit in guard to take care of the boys there.

ham. In an interleaved almanac of 1692, (shown to me by George Brinley, Esq., of Hartford,) the Rev. James Pierpont, 4th minister of New Haven, writes under date of March 11th, as follows:—"I went to Hartford to transact with the new church about my brother Benjamin's settlement, and returned the 19th." It would seem from this item that Rev. Benj. Pierpont was talked of in Hartford as Mr. Whiting's successor in 1692. Mr. Buckingham could not then have been settled here in 1690, as has been heretofore assumed. Indeed, the recently discovered records of the church prove that he began his ministry here in 1694, the church having been without a settled pastor for nearly five years. He graduated at Harvard in 1690. Mr. Buckingham labored as pastor of this church for thirty-seven years,—or from 1694 till November 19th, 1731, the day of his death. Not long before his settlement here, Rev. Timothy Woodbridge was settled over the First Church. These two ministers labored side by side in good accord for nearly forty years, and died together, as it were, Mr. Woodbridge surviving Mr. Buckingham only six months.

The second pastor of this church was one of the most eminent ministers in Connecticut,—a gentleman of engaging manners, superior abilities, and exemplary character.

By request of the Governor and Council, he served as Chaplain in the expedition of 1710 against Port Royal, and in that of 1711, against Crown Point, his place being supplied by public charge, and his services requited by the sum of six pounds in money per month. Subsequently the sum of ten pounds was granted him in consideration of his readiness to go into the expedition, and the good service he did, and also, in consideration that he served the most part of the time alone.^a

In May, 1719, both the Hartford ministers were chosen as representatives from this town to the General Assembly, probably because they had so stoutly resisted the removal of the collegiate school from Saybrook to New Haven, instead of to Wethersfield or Hartford.^b Mr. Woodbridge was not permitted to take his seat, on account of some disrespectful remarks he had made concerning the civil authorities. As Mr. Buckingham did not take his seat, it is probable that he was in the same condemnation.^c During the pastorates of Woodbridge and Buckingham, both the Hartford churches were very zealously practising the half-way covenant. In 1696* nearly all the young people in the First congregation subscribed the covenant proposed to them. The ministers were in the habit of going among the people once a year and drumming them up to this duty. They came in large numbers, presented their children for baptism, and that was the end of it.^d They made no pretence of conversion, did not come to the Lord's Supper, and the number of communicants was very small. The Hartford North Association, in 1711, passed several resolutions with a view to checking the alarming declension in morals and religion. Their recommendations were numerous, but the chief duty insisted upon was that of urging the people generally to "own the covenant." These resolutions were read in the Second church of Hartford, and proposed to the people, December 30th, 1711.^e A day of fasting and prayer ensued. The people were urged to own the covenant very much as they are urged in temperance meetings to sign the pledge. It was an easy way of fulfilling all righteousness, and a short road to reformation. Over one hundred persons came forward to subscribe, and went their way. Some knowledge is thus given us of the condition of things under Mr. Buckingham's ministry, and of the means that were used for the reformation of society, the revival of religion, and the edification of the church.^f In the year 1715, the pastors of the

Soc. Records.

^f In the winter of 1710-11, the Conn. River was not frozen over below Hartford, nor for several miles above it.

Connecticut churches reported a great scarcity of Bibles, great neglect of public worship, of catechising, and of family discipline, and an alarming abundance of most every mentionable form of evil, whereupon vigorous reforming measures were adopted by the Legislature.^g

In his election sermon, entitled, "Moses and Aaron," preached May 9th, 1728, Mr. Buckingham made some pointed allusions to "some who have risen up among you speaking perverse things, blaspheming the constitution and order of your churches, * * * who unchurch the best and greatest part of christians, and leave you with the best of your flocks to unconverted mercies, * * * merely for the sake of non-agreement with them in a few unscriptural rites and notions." The reference to several cases of separation from the "standing order," and to the gradual growth of the Episcopal church in Connecticut, is unmistakeable.

One hundred and forty persons were admitted to full communion during the pastorate of Mr. Buckingham. Twenty-five were admitted in 1712. About eight hundred and fifty children were baptized during the same period.^h

In 1727 an effort was made to re-unite the two Hartford churches. The First Church were about to build a new House of worship, and the small and uncouth South Meeting house needed to be replaced by some larger and better building. At a meeting of the First Society, in January, 1726-7, to consider of building a new meeting house in place of that which then stood on what is now the State House yard, it was voted, "as it would be more for the honor, comfort, union, and ease of the town, and for the more easy and honorable support of the ministry amongst us, that one meeting house may be built for the meeting of all the people that belong to the two societies, &c., &c., that his Honor the Governor, Capt. Hezekiah Wylls, Capt. John Sheldon, and Dea. Thomas Richards be a committee from this society, to propose the premises to our friends of the new church, and endeavor that a meeting of said society may be gained, to see if they are of our mind, and whether they will join with us to build a house for the public worship of God, and unite into one society."ⁱ The new church were not willing, and after a protracted controversy between "those of the North side" and "those of the South side" in the First Society, as to where their new house should be located, it was finally decided to build "on the south-east corner of the burying-lot," and there in 1737, the "brick meeting house" was erected where the Center Church edifice now stands.

The successor of Mr. Buckingham was the Rev. Elnathan Whitman, son of Samuel Whitman who was minister at Farmington from 1706 till 1751. He was settled as pastor over this church on November 29th, 1732, in which office he labored for about forty-five years, until his death which occurred in March, 1777. During six years of this time, he was assisted by a colleague of whom we shall presently speak. Mr. Whitman was a portly, dignified, noble man, and one of the most godly ministers this church has ever had. There are no records of the church, during the period of his ministry, in existence. For several years prior to the date of Mr. Whitman's settlement here, the state of religion throughout New England had been lamentably low. The bitter fruits of the half-way covenant system were being gathered in anguish of spirit and despair of heart. A cold, lifeless morality and the use of empty forms of religion were characteristic of the churches. The ministers also were often mere moralizers and ordinance-servers.

In these days of alarming declension, the great revival, in which Jonathan Edwards took so conspicuous a part, and to the increase of which Whitfield's wonderful eloquence contributed so much, began. The measures that had brought sad disaster upon the churches were rebuked by the Holy Ghost, and began to be abandoned. Jonathan Edwards sounded the note of deliverance,^j the Gospel of regeneration began to be preached again, and all the dry bones of the valley commenced to stir with mysterious life. Whoso would warm his cold heart, and quicken his sluggish pulses, and be translated, as it were, into a sweet and celestial region, let him read the wonderful narrative of this "great awakening," which Mr. Edwards wrote while as yet the songs of rejoicing angels had not ceased, and his great mind was full of a music that was like theirs. Preaching began to be powerful as it dwelt now on the dying love of Christ, the sovereign grace of God, the necessity of regeneration and pardon through faith in Jesus the crucified. Multitudes came forward, not to sign pledges and own covenants, and use rites, but to ask "what must I do to be saved," or to testify of God's renewing grace. Great assemblies that came together (as at Enfield to hear Edwards) in irreverence and carelessness, were shaken so that their demonstrations of concern filled the house. Connecticut was more remarkably the scene of powerful revivals than any part of the whole country.^k During the year 1740, 1741, 1742, nearly every part of the colony was reached and blessed by the glorious work. Among the ministers who most favored the work (while others opposed it) was Mr. Whitman of this church. His lot was cast in with Mills, and Pomeroy, and Wheelock, and Bellamy, and doubtless his own church was among those that were abundantly refreshed.

In January, 1749, the South society applied to the County Court to fix a site for a new meeting house. The place fixed upon not proving acceptable, the General Court, in May, 1752, appointed a committee to select a location, and they reported a site "in the highway, a little north of the house of Mr. Joseph Buckingham."¹ The Second Meeting house of this society was erected on the site thus determined, about the year 1754. tion or dedication. It is well remembered by many now living among us. One gentleman in this city well remembers one event that occurred in it during Dr. Flint's ministry. He was a boy then, and one summer Sunday, during a long prayer, he thought he might steal a look out of the open window unnoticed. He put his head out, and suddenly the raised sash fell down upon his shoulders and held him fast in a ridiculous attitude, until he was released by others. An admirable ground-plan of the building has recently been drawn by Capt. Nathaniel Woodhouse, who for some years worshiped in it. It stood in the highway, directly across Buckingham Street, which was then wide enough to allow road-way at either end of the building, its longest side on Main Street, with an entrance at the south end, a porch at the north or steeple end, and a main entrance on Main Street.

At this time (1756) the population of Hartford, including both East and West Hartford, was only a little more than three thousand.

In July, 1762, Mrs. Anne Burnham bequeathed to this society the house and homestead where she then resided, containing about five acres of land. This property extending on Main Street from Buckingham to Park Street, had belonged to her son, Joseph Buckingham. He had intended to give it to the church, but died suddenly before completing a conveyance of the property, and his mother piously executed his purpose.^m

In this same year the Protestant Episcopal Church was planted in Hartford, and the first organization of Christ Church was effected.

When Mr. Whitman had been pastor of the church about thirty-five years, his health became so much impaired that it seemed necessary to settle a colleague pastor. At a meeting of the South Society, January, 1767,ⁿ it was voted to invite the Rev. Wm. Patten to become the colleague pastor of this church. It was voted to lease him one acre of land for 999 years "at the rate of one pepper corn of land per annum, rent," and also to give him the sum of three hundred and fifty pounds, lawful money, as a settlement.

This money was to be paid in labor and materials to build a house and barn. Should Mr. Patten cease from the ministry here on his own account within ten years, two-thirds of the settlement should be returned, if he should go away at the end of twenty years, one-third was to be returned. If he should remain thirty years, the settlement should be his unconditionally. His annual salary was fixed at one hundred pounds. Mr. Whitman had eighty-five pounds, annually, and the use of the Parsonage land secured unto him by the society. Mr. Patten accepted the call, and on the 23d of September, 1767, was installed.

In the 144th number of the Connecticut Courant, there is a letter which sets forth with unusual particularity the details of this installation, and gives the entire text of Mr. Whitman's charge to his colleague.^o It reads much like one which Dr. Hawes would have written, and is of course good. The sermon was by Mr. Wheelock of Lebanon, and Mr. Lockwood of Wethersfield gave the right hand of fellowship. "The whole was conducted with decency and decorum." In the next issue of the Courant a few "lines" were printed, addressed "to the author of the charge inserted in the last "issue of that paper."

"Behold the venerable seer began !
 Strange the attention and the listening ear !
 As when the dying father calls to his bed,
 His children bidding his last farewell.
 Solemn the charge, instructive every line,
 While flowing tears bedewed the hearer's cheeks.
 Blessed man ! for spotless sanctity renowned,
 Loved by the good and by the guilty feared,
 No railing pen can sully your deserts,
 Nor blot your name from the celestial roll,
 Unfading crowns and laurels ever green,
 Immortal prizes wait for you above."

We gladly believe for dear old Mr. Whitman's sake, that these lines contain far more truth than poetry.

^o Conn. Courant, Sept. 28, 1767. The Courant was established by Thomas Green, in Oct. 1764.

This same year Mr. Thos. Seymour was appointed to read the Psalm, and Mr. James Bunce was added to the committee for seating the meeting house.

The following document may be worth noticing :

HARTFORD, May 30th, 1767.

Whereas, a challenge was given by fifteen men south of the great bridge in Hartford, to an equal number north of said bridge, to play a game of cricket the day after the last election, the Public are hereby informed that the challenged beat the challengers by a great majority. Now said north do hereby acquaint the south side that they are not afraid to meet them with any number they shall choose, and give them the liberty of picking their men among themselves, and also the best players both in the West Division and Wethersfield. Witness our hands (in the name of the whole company).

WILLIAM PRATT,
NIELL McLEAN, JR.

One striking event, at least, occurred in the summer of 1771, when the meeting house and steeple were struck and badly damaged by lightning.

In 1773, it was voted in the society, "that the reading of the Psalm, as heretofore practiced, shall be omitted." There is evidence that from this time forward much attention was given to the instruction of the people in the "art of psalmody."

In the summer of July, 1772, very serious charges of intemperance were formally made by certain members of the church, against Rev. Mr. Patten, and an investigation of them was demanded and became necessary. The society voted in favor of an enquiry into the general "uneasiness" that prevailed respecting Mr. Patten. The charges were preferred by Daniel Steel, Jonathan Welles, and James Bunce, "for ourselves and the rest of the members of said church." An Ecclesiastical Council met in Hartford, at the call of Mr. Whitman, on October 6th, 1772, to hear and judge of this complaint. Rev. Solomon Williams was moderator, and Rev. Enoch Huntington, scribe of the Council. Twenty-three distinct articles of complaint, with specifications of time, place, and circumstances of offence were laid before the council.

The trial held on a long time, but finally after having fully heard and considered the case, the Council gave an opinion which partly exonerated and partly condemned Mr. Patten. The church and society insisted on his dismissal, and another council was soon after called, by whose action Mr. Patten was dismissed, not however, without receiving some sort of recommendation to other churches.^p

He was dismissed in April, 1773.

His earthly labors were soon ended, for after lingering two years in broken health, he died, aged thirty-six, on the 16th of June, 1775, in his father's house at Roxbury. He was born at Billerica, in March, 1738, graduated at Harvard in 1754, was ordained, when not quite nineteen years old, at Halifax, Mass., where he preached nearly ten years. He was settled in Hartford about seven years, and was an unusually attractive and popular preacher. His wife, a daughter of Pres. Wheelock of Dartmouth College, a most godly woman, passed her long life here, dying in December, 1831, at the age of ninety-one.^q

After a few years service, the good and venerable Mr. Whitman, died in March, 1777, in the forty-fifth year of his faithful ministry. A very good portrait of him is to be seen in the Historical Rooms in this city, and also a portrait of his wife.^r

^p A complete copy of all the charges made against Mr. Patten, with specifications and proofs, &c., and also of the doings of both the Councils that were held to consider the matter is in my possession. The records of the society say little about it. I have written so much and only so much of the sad affair as seemed to be necessary, in view of some rumors and traditions that have been abroad concerning Mr. Patten. It is evident that the good and wise men who heard the case had a deep sympathy for their brother who had fallen into temptation. He was a good man.

^q Among his children were Rev. Wm. Patten, D.D., for nearly fifty years minister at Newport, who died in Hartford, in 1839, aged seventy-six; George J. Patten, who for many years taught a well-known school in this city, and died in 1830. Ruth and Mary Patten, who were often seen in their old age in the Fourth church of Hartford by persons now living, and who died here, the one in March, 1850, aged eighty-six, and the other in the month following, aged eighty-one.

^r Mr. Whitman's services were frequently sought in public services, and he preached the election sermon, May 9th, 1745.

During the Revolutionary war, from 1777 till 1784, the church was destitute of a settled pastor, although from no lack of earnest efforts to procure one. In January, 1778, Mr. Abraham Baldwin was invited to preach on probation, but declined. He was then a Tutor in Yale College, and afterwards studied law, went to Savannah, was a member of the Constitutional Convention, a member of Congress from Georgia until 1799, and afterward Senator, until his death.

In February of the same year, Mr. Joseph Buckminster, who was associated as Tutor at Yale College with Mr. Baldwin, came hither to preach. In April he was invited to become the Pastor of this church. Four hundred pounds were voted him as a settlement, and one hundred and thirty pounds annually for a salary, "the whole to be paid in labor, wheat, rye, corn, beef, pork, wool, wood, flax, and cheese, according to the rates and prices enumerated in and by a certain act of this State, made December 18th, 1776, entitled, 'an act to prevent monopolies and oppressions,' &c., &c., or in current money equivalent thereto." The call was declined, however, and he settled shortly after in Portsmouth, N. H., where he remained for thirty-three years. His son, Joseph Stevens Buckminster, was the still more famous and eloquent clergyman, (Unitarian,) who for many years preached in Brattle St. church, Boston.^s

In 1779, a certain Rev. Dr. Rogers was tempted with the offer of twelve dollars a Sabbath, to be paid in wheat at nine shillings and nine pence per bushel, &c., &c., and thirty cords of wood each year, besides pasture for a cow and two horses, to come here and preach the Gospel. Mr. Rogers withstood the temptation. In 1780, the society voted in consideration of many of the older people, "that for the future no votes shall be passed by this Parish at any of their meetings after sunset, unless by special vote they order otherwise."

In 1781, the services of Rev. Samuel Miller were ineffectually sought.

^s New Am. Cyclopedia, Vol. 4 : 55. See "memoirs of J. Buckminster, D. D., and of his son, Rev. Jos. Stevens Buckminster, by Eliza Buckminster Lee," Boston, 1851.

In May, 1783, the Society, desirous of obtaining a minister "of eminence and distinction as the surest way to mutual edification and influence, and being of the opinion that it is not inconsistent or contrary to the Gospel Plan to make application to any gentleman in the ministry (examples of which have been frequent) to remove and settle here," extended a call to Rev. Mr. Nathan Williams of Tolland. The call was declined, and Mr. Williams remained at Tolland till 1827, when he died aged ninety-four, his wife surviving him six years and dying at length, aged ninety-five.

In 1784, January 7th, the Rev. Benjamin Boardman was invited to become the pastor of this church. Besides the use of the parsonage house and grounds, he was to receive the sum of one hundred and twenty pounds lawful money, annually, "during the time that he and the major part of this church and society shall be mutually agreed in each other, which is the only bond of christian community!" Mr. Boardman replied that he considered the invitation a call of Providence, and would accept it, provided the stipulation for salary should read, instead of so many pounds, &c., "four hundred Spanish milled dollars," and provided these Spanish dollars should be made sure to him by some provision for the punctual payment of the same. He was installed May 5th, 1784. "The council convened at the house of Capt. Aaron Bull, whence the church, with sundry respectable characters marched in order to the meeting house." Rev. Dr. Goodrich preached the sermon, and Rev. Mr. Strong gave the right hand "in a polite and elegant manner." The following "little bill" will serve to show with what good cheer the ministers comforted themselves on solemn church occasions. On the back of the bill is written, "Ordination : eight pounds allowed and order given on treasurer in full."

Received by me, ISRAEL SEYMOUR.

In this same year the city of Hartford was incorporated.

In 1786 an important bequest involving lands of considerable extent and value was made to this society by Mr. William Stanley.^u

Mr. Boardman had served as Chaplain during the war of the Revolution, and tradition says, that by virtue of having been able to make himself heard in prayer at great range, he had earned for himself the Roundheadish soubriquet of “Big-Gun-of-the-Gospel Boardman.” From his portrait which hangs in the Historical Rooms, we should infer that, physically at least, he was able to pray at any reasonable length or distance. Of the seven years of his active labors here very little is known, save that they were years in which the society was struggling under unusually heavy financial burdens, and the church was lying in a very low and unpromising condition. The “four hundred Spanish milled dollars” were not paid punctually. In 1789 the salary was reduced twenty-five per cent., and the society was greatly in debt to their pastor.

This same year the First Baptist Church in Hartford was organized, though their house of worship (on the corner of Temple and Market Sts.,) was not erected till nine years later.

In April, 1790, Mr. Boardman requested a dismissal. Some arrangement was made between him and the society, ^u The details of this legacy it is not necessary to enumerate. The will specially provided for the purchase of a tankard of a certain size and shape for the communion table. This tankard was used at the Bi-centennial Communion Service.

by which he was to retire from all duty and responsibility as minister, although there was no formal dismissal by an Ecclesiastical Council. Rev. Mr. Boardman died on the 12th of February, 1802.

The population of Hartford, in 1790, including both East and West Hartford, was about four thousand, having increased one thousand in thirty-four years.

On the 3d of February, 1791, with Mr. Boardman's hearty concurrence, the society unanimously invited Mr. Abel Flint, who had been preaching here some months, to settle as their pastor. The church concurred in this action. He was to have the use of the Parsonage house and grounds, and for a salary, the sum of one hundred and twenty pounds, annually, for seven years, and after that time, the sum of one hundred and fifty pounds. Rev. Mr. Flint was ordained as Pastor of this church on the 20th of April, 1791. Rev. D. D. Hitchcock of Providence preached the ordination sermon. The following document will interpret itself.

The catalogue of members of the church, and also the records of the church from the date of Mr. Flint's ordination are complete. Here may be inserted the following action of the church in 1794 :—" VOTED, as the unanimous opinion of this church, that it is unnecessary for those who have once made a public profession of religion by owning the covenant of this church for the purpose of having their children baptized, to own the covenant again previous to coming to the communion. And that whenever any such persons shall be desirous of becoming members in full communion, all that is required of them is that they signify their desire to the Pastor, to be communicated to the church."

When Mr. Flint took charge of this church, it was nearly exhausted. There were but twenty-seven members,—three less than at the beginning, in 1670. In eight years only sixteen persons joined the church on profession of faith. But in the years 1798 and 1799, quite a powerful revival of religion was experienced in this town, and the church thenceforth started on a new career. Twenty-six persons were admitted by profession, in 1799.^v

The city of Hartford began to show signs of an increasing enterprise and prosperity. In 1792, the Hartford Bank was established. In 1794, the erection of the State House was commenced. In the ten years from 1790 to 1800, the population of the town increased from four thousand to more than five thousand, gaining more by over three hundred in that time than it had gained in the preceding thirty-five years.

In 1808, another revival occurred, as a result of which more than sixty persons were received into the "two Presbyterian churches" of Hartford, in the month of June. The interest continued into the autumn, and more than one hundred and twenty persons were then received to these churches, besides many who were then (November) propounded for admission. There were many who bitterly deprecated the new practice of holding evening meetings! In 1808, thirty-seven persons were admitted to this church, and in 1809, twenty-nine were received, on profession of faith.* Among the admissions in 1808, stands the honored name of Thomas Tileston, afterwards Deacon, than whom no man of his generation obtained a more goodly report. His memory is still sweet and precious, like that of Dea. J. Hubbard Wells who came after him.

In 1814 the church took measures for building a chapel in which to hold religious meetings, and two years later the chapel was finished and occupied. It stood "on the north side of (old) Buckingham St.," at some distance westward from the meeting-house.

The year 1818 marks the birth-time of the Sunday School in Hartford. There were at that time only four churches in the city; the First and Second Congregational, Christ Church, and the First Baptist.

On the 20th of April a meeting was called to consider the propriety of establishing a Sunday School. Rev. Abel Flint was chosen chairman, and Seth Terry, Esq., clerk.^x It was unanimously resolved by the gentlemen present, that measures should be taken to establish a Sunday School in Hartford. At a subsequent meeting, on the 5th of May, "The Hartford

Sunday School Society" was organized, whose officers were to be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and nine Directors, who were to constitute a "Board of Managers." Rev. Mr. Flint was chosen President, Mr. Seth Terry, Clerk, and among the Directors were Rev. Elisha Cushman, James M. Goodwin, and Rev. Joel Hawes, who on the 3d of March had been settled in the First Church.

Four different schools were formed, which were to meet at nine o'clock A. M., and at half past one o'clock P. M., of each Sabbath. Mr. Elijah Knox was appointed Superintendent of the school at the South Church, and eight teachers were chosen for it. Thomas Tileston and Horace Goodwin were appointed its visitors. Committees were selected to visit families and influence them to send their children. About five hundred scholars were gathered in these four schools the first summer. The sessions were discontinued during the winter, but were re-commenced in April of 1819, when an annual meeting was held at which Mr. Flint delivered an address. The Sunday Schools were managed by this Union Sunday School Society until the autumn of 1820, when it was deemed best for the future, that each parish should manage its own school, and the Society ceased its operations. About this time a great revival visited this entire region. The interest seems to have been almost simultaneous over this whole district of country.^y Nineteen out of the twenty churches in the North Consociation of Hartford County were refreshed. More than one thousand souls were added to the churches, besides hundreds who were hopefully converted. In Hartford the interest was especially remarkable. The whole city was shaken. Fourteen persons were received in this church in 1820, and in 1821 fifty-three were received.

In 1820 the First Methodist Episcopal Church in this city was organized, and a house of worship was erected on Trumbull street.

A great excitement was created in the parish during the year 1822, by an attempt which was made by a set of free-thinkers in the Society, to get control of the funds of the ^y Christian Spectator, Vol. 3: 551.

Society and, in fact, to put the whole church establishment in the hands of the Universalists. The Society's Committee were active in this discreditable but abortive scheme. Mr. Flint was now in delicate and declining health. By being violently thrown from a wagon, he had received a shock that affected his mind somewhat, as well as his health, and he was thenceforth inadequate to the full discharge of his ministerial duties. The following letter explains itself.

“ HARTFORD, 27th May, 1822.

REV. DOCT. FLINT,

SIR:—As Committee of the Second Ecclesiastical Society, we would respectfully represent that a large proportion of the members of said Society, believing in the universality of the atonement and of the final restitution of all men, have expressed their desire that a clergyman agreeing with them in sentiment, should be permitted to preach in the meeting-house of the Society one-half of the Sabbaths previous to our next annual meeting. The equity of this proposition may be considered conclusive, from the consideration, that as they are members of the same Society, and subject to the like burthens with their other christian brethren, so also are they entitled to equal privileges, and of course have an equal claim with those who differ from them in sentiment, to hear the Gospel preached according to their understanding of the Scriptures.

We are, respectfully, Reverend Sir,

yours, &c.,

Signed, ELISHA SHEPHERD, } Committee.”
 SYLVESTER WELLS, }

To this Doct. Flint replied, two days after, as follows;—

“ To the Committee of the Second Ecclesiastical Society of Hartford :

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of the 27th was duly received, and after mature reflection and consideration, I submit to you the following reply.

According to the established usages of our country from its first settlement to the present time, and. as far as my infor mation extends, of all other christian countries, it is considered as the right, the privilege, and the duty of a minister, regularly ordained and installed in a church and society, to have control of the Pulpit belonging to the Parish on the Sabbath, and at such other times as he may have occasion to occupy it. In exercising this right, however, and in discharging this duty, he is bound by certain restrictions, a principal one of which is that he do not encourage what he considers as fundamental errors to be taught to the people of which he has the charge : and that he do not admit, voluntarily, into the pulpit, preachers who inculcate a system of religion materially different from that one on which the church and society were founded. I do not therefore, Gentlemen, consider myself authorized to comply with your proposal, and were I to comply, I should betray the trust committed to me when I took charge of the Second Church and Society of Hartford. The Society was incorporated, I believe, in the year 1669, and at that time and ever since, the Society, and the Pastor for the time being, have been considered believers in the general system of doctrines adopted by the Consociated Churches of Connecticut. This system of doctrines is fundamentally different from that which, in your letter, you propose that I should consent to have taught for one-half of the Sabbaths, in the pulpit committed to my charge thirty-one years ago the last month. You will therefore perceive, Gentlemen, that by complying with your proposal, I should be guilty of a gross violation of my ordination vows. I should give my sanction to what I believe, to what the church believes, and to what a respectable portion of the parish believes to be a dangerous error, and I should drive several hundred people from the house where they have been accustomed to meet to worship God on the Sabbath, where, according to the laws of the country, they have a right to meet, and from which they cannot be debarred, except by an exertion of arbitrary power.

Permit me therefore to observe to you, Gentlemen, that I, and those who act with me in this business, claim no right to dictate to others what religious sentiments they shall embrace, and we trust that we are really as much opposed to religious persecution as those who say so much concerning love and good-will to all men.

All that we claim and all that we ask, is to be left to the unmolested enjoyment of our own opinions, and to the occupancy of a house of worship that was built by our fathers for persons of our general system of sentiments, our right to which we conceive we have not forfeited. If any members who have been members of the Society, have materially altered their sentiments, we are certainly willing they should enjoy their own opinions; but we believe they have no right, however numerous they may be, to what, upon every just and honest principle belongs to people of a different persuasion. I hope, Gentlemen, you will maturely consider what I have written, and if it should not produce conviction in your minds that I am correct, I shall at least have discharged my duty, and I must leave the event to the wise disposal of that Providence which controls all things.

Yours, with due consideration,

Signed, ABEL FLINT,

Pastor of the Sec. Church and Soc., Hartford, May 29, 1822."

But this courteous, firm, and perfectly unanswerable reply stirred up a determination to carry the point by stratagem and force. A singular and scandalous scene occurred in the South meeting-house one Sunday evening in the summer of 1822. Taking advantage of the illness of the Pastor, it was determined to put Rev. Mr. Carrique, a Universalist preacher, into the pulpit on Sunday evening. The project was noised abroad, and the church was filled at an early hour. The choir (in which were several ladies who still live with us,) did what their voices could to prevent the disgrace. They sang on, and on, and on, tuning up afresh with good orthodox psalmody so often as the reverend interloper seemed likely to get a chance to speak, until they were silenced by authority. One of our oldest and most honorable citizens was present, and on the same evening wrote down an account of this affair, which reads as follows:—

"Rev. Mr. Carrique, a Universalist preacher, came into the house before the bell rung, accompanied by Dr. Wells and

Elisha Shepherd, and Mr. C. went into the pulpit. The house was well filled. There had been a meeting appointed by Dr. Flint; the Rev. Mr. Smith had been invited to preach by Dr. Flint, who was absent; the choir had been singing for some time. Soon after the bell commenced ringing Mr. Smith came in and went into the pulpit. Dr. Wells followed him up. After some whispering between Dr. Wells and Mr. Smith, he got up and stated to the people that he had come there to preach, that he was a stranger and did not understand the difficulties in the Society, but had been requested by Dr. Flint to preach for him in that place, and he should preach unless he was forbidden. He told the committee, (Dr. Wells and Mr. Shepherd,) that he could preach in the chapel or out doors, if he could not preach there. Dr. Wells then arose in the pulpit and said that the Society ought to know that the time for which the agreement was made with Dr. Flint, that he might use the house Sabbath evening, ended in March; that Dr. Flint had been informed on Saturday afternoon that a large number of the Society were desirous to hear Mr. Carrique preach, and that Dr. Flint had notified his people to meet here when he knew that Mr. Carrique was to preach! Rev. Mr. Smith then said, 'do you forbid my preaching?' 'No,' said Dr. Wells, 'I did not say so.' Mr. Smith replied, 'then I will preach, if I am not forbidden.' He then took hold of the Bible. Dr. Wells then said, 'we expect Mr. Carrique to preach.' Mr. Smith then said, 'I will go to the chapel and preach there, as I cannot preach here.' There was now great commotion in the house, many voices calling on Mr. Smith to preach. Mr. Smith said, 'If I am forbidden to preach by the committee, I wish them to say so.' Mr. Shepherd said, 'I wish you would not preach, I wish you would go away.' The noise and confusion were very much increased, and Mr. Smith soon left the house, the people following him. Dr. Wells then called for Squire Niles, and he came into a pew near the pulpit. Dr. Wells requested Mr. Carrique to begin the service. He began reading a Psalm, and there was so much noise made by the people going out, that he was obliged to stop. Dr. Wells then, in a loud voice, said that religious services had commenced, and any person who made a disturbance, would be prosecuted according to law; Squire Niles had the Statute book, and, if necessary, would read the Riot Act. Three-fourths of the people then went to the chapel, headed by the good old Deacons Hempstead and Tilston.^z

Thus ended the attempt of the Universalists and infidels to obtain possession of the good old South Church and its fund. After this the people came out in their strength and their enemies were scattered.

I was present, and wrote the preceding account at the time.

B. HUDSON, Jr."^a

At a meeting of the Society held in the Meeting House on the 23d of September, (1822) the following vote was submitted to the meeting by Dr. Sylvester Wells, viz: "Whereas the inhabitants of this society are divided in their religious opinions, not only as to matters of faith, but also as to what description of preaching has the most salutary and beneficial effect upon the community, &c., &c. * * * Wherefore, VOTED, That the committee of said society are hereby empowered and directed to open the meeting house of said society to such minister or ministers of the Gospel, sustaining a fair moral character, to preach therein, as they may think expedient, a portion of the time not exceeding one-half of the Sabbaths from this period to the next annual meeting of the society: Provided, that the preaching which may be authorized or permitted by virtue of this vote, shall not subject said society to any expense or charge whatever, and provided further that when any preaching may be authorized or permitted in said house, on the Sabbath, in pursuance of this vote, the committee shall give at least ten days notice thereof to the Rev. Dr. Flint."

^z Joshua Hempstead, who had resigned his office as Deacon in 1818.

^a Two other letters bearing on this affair, one from the Committee of the Society to Mr. Flint, and one from the Rev. Mr. Carrique to Mr. Flint, are in my possession, but are not of sufficient importance to warrant their introduction here. They furnish additional evidence of Dr. Flint's faithfulness and courage.

Mr. Hudson's account is abundantly confirmed by many persons who were eyewitnesses of the disgraceful scene.

"After a short discussion on the above vote, the question was taken, and decided in the negative by a large majority."^b

In a letter written by Mrs. Ruth Patten, (widow of Rev. Wm. Patten, and then eighty-four years old) dated "Hartford, May 30th, 1823," the following information is communicated:—"Dr. Flint has of late been quite an invalid,—goes out but little, appears dejected and unhappy. About sixty of his parishioners have signed off to join the Universalists, who are building a splendid church south of the State House. Many other buildings are going up; much animation expressed on every subject but religion."

In June, 1823, the First Roman Catholic Church of Hartford, (St. Patrick's) was gathered in Talcott St.

In the month of November, Dr. Flint requested to be dismissed from his pastoral office. He was accordingly dismissed by an Ecclesiastical Council, on the 13th of Jan. 1824.

Rev. Abel Flint was born in Windham, August 6th, 1765, graduated at Yale in 1785, was settled in Hartford, in April, 1791, where he labored for nearly thirty-three years. All who were members of the church at the time of his dismissal, had been admitted during his ministry, save Mr. Thomas Seymour, who died in 1829. There can be no question that the ministry of Mr. Flint was a very laborious and faithful one. He was certainly a man of great industry and influence. He was one of the founders of the Connecticut Missionary Society, and for twenty-four years was Secretary of its Board of Trustees. He was prominent in organizing and managing the Connecticut Bible Society. Dr. Strong and he, for seven years at least, were the chief editors of the Connecticut Evangelical Magazine. He assisted in preparing the once famous "Hartford Selection" of hymns, which was extensively used. He was prominent in founding and fostering the Sunday School Society. Our present Institute Library may be traced back to his primitive provision for the wants of the parish in respect of reading. His published discourses are numerous, including an election sermon, preached May, 1816, a discourse on the death of Washington, and several funeral and ordination sermons. His treatise on Surveying is well known. He translated many of the sermons of Bourdaloue and Massilon. He published also "a spelling, pronouncing, and parsing dictionary, designed for the use of schools." He was of commanding presence and dignity, every inch a gentleman of most urbane manners. As a reader and speaker he was distinguished, and his appearance in the pulpit was very impressive.^c

Previous to his dismissal, he had engaged the Rev. Joel Harvey Linsley to preach here for several sabbaths, and his services proved so acceptable, that on the 21st of Jan., (only eight days after Mr. Flint's retirement) the society unanimously voted to call him to be their Pastor, offering him the use of the Parsonage house and land, and a salary of eight hundred dollars per annum. The church immediately concurred. Mr. Linsley accepted the call, and was ordained over this church on the 25th of February, 1825.^d This same year the North Church, (now the Park church,) which had been organized in September, 1824, dedicated their meeting house. Mrs. Patten, writing about this time from Hartford, says,—“The new Congregation (North Church) appears like a new married couple. Their house is perfectly neat, aisles carpeted, no gallery except a small one above the pulpit for singers, and just such a minister as they want.^e I think at the South (Church) they have a proper man for them. * * Having gained considerable knowledge of human nature, connected with strength of nerves, he appears peculiarly calculated for their minister. Poor Mr. F. ! (Flint) it appears his life is nearly concluded.

^c During the war of 1812, on a certain Lord's day, some soldiers were in the gallery of the Second Church. When Dr. Flint announced his text—"Fear God, honor the King," one of the soldiers, who had more patriotism than wisdom, arose in his seat and startled the congregation by exclaiming, "Fear God, honor the President, sir!" He was removed, but the good Doctor's gravity was sorely tried, and on reaching home he indulged in irrepressible laughter.

A daughter of Dr. Flint, (Mrs. Norton,) who was permitted to be with us at our anniversary, distinctly remembers and vouches for this story.

^d Rev. Prof. Fitch, of New Haven preached the sermon, and Rev. Joel Hawes gave the right hand of fellowship.

He boards * * nearly opposite his former dwelling. We must leave him in the hands of his Lord and Master." Shortly after, on the 7th of March, 1825, Mr. Flint died, in the family of Col. Elijah Terry, in the old wooden house next north of St. Peter's Church, and his funeral sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Thos. Robbins, of East Windsor. "His character was represented in a fair and honorable light."

At a special meeting of the Second Ecclesiastical Society of Hartford, held January 29th, 1825, it was unanimously voted to build a new meeting house, and all the necessary measures for carrying into execution this vote were taken. On the 11th of April, 1827, the new brick meeting house, within whose walls we are now assembled, was solemnly dedicated to the worship and service of God. The dedication sermon was preached by the Pastor. Dr. Spring, Dr. Perkins, and Rev. Joel Hawes also participated in the services.

In 1828, (February 2,) the church appointed a committee to revise the articles of faith and covenant. We have been unable to find the report of this committee. It is undoubtedly true, however, that at this time, the original covenant of the church was set aside for another longer and decidedly inferior one. But recently (February, 1870,) this church has voted to go back to the old covenant, and to-day we stand on the original platform whereon Mr. Whiting and his little company gathered to form this church, two hundred years ago.

In 1830, the Pastor's salary was raised to the sum of one thousand dollars, and the very liberal appropriation of two hundred dollars was made for music. The population of the town at this time (including East and West Hartford,) was nearly ten thousand.

In 1831, the church voted in favor of the project of forming a new church in the city, and in 1832, the Fourth Congregational Church was organized.

Meanwhile events had occurred which had so far weakened the bond of unity between Mr. Linsley and a portion of his people, that in the Spring of 1832, he intimated his purpose of asking a dismission. By a vote of thirty-seven to five, the church requested him not to do it. In July, he sent a formal request for dismission to the church, which was not granted, but afterwards, as he urged his request, a Council was called by whose action his pastoral relation was dissolved on the 21st of August, 1832. Dr. Linsley's labors in this church, though not of long continuance, were abundantly fruitful. His praise was in all the churches. He was distinguished for his wisdom and efficiency in promoting and conducting revivals of religion. During the eight years of his ministry, more than one hundred and fifty persons were added to this church on profession of faith:—in 1827, forty-four persons, and in 1831, seventy-six. Many of the present active members of the church were gathered in as fruits of the revival of 1830.

Rev. Joel Harvey Linsley, D. D., than whom this church never had a saintlier minister, was born in Cornwall, Vt., July 15th, 1790, and graduated at Middlebury College in 1811. After serving two years as Tutor in the College, he resumed his previous law studies, and in 1815 was admitted to the bar. He pursued the practice of the law for seven years in Middlebury, when he felt constrained to abandon his profession for that of the ministry. After several months of missionary labor in South Carolina, he was settled in Hartford, in 1823, and remained here until August, 1832. In 1832 he was settled over the Park Street Church in Boston, and in 1835 became President of Marietta College, Ohio. In 1846 he became Pastor of the church in Greenwich, Conn., and labored there to the end of his life. He fell asleep on Sabbath morning, March 22d, 1868. He was "a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost:"—pure, guileless, earnest, and devoted. Mourning that he was not permitted to grace this anniversary with his venerable presence, we, as a church, bless God to-day for his faithful, fruitful labors here, and gratefully cherish his precious and holy memory.^f

^f "The Rev. Mr. Parker, in his excellent address, properly commended the Rev. Dr. Linsley, formerly of the South Church, for his saintliness and efficiency as a minister of Christ, but omitted to mention the fervent piety and abundant labors of Mrs. Linsley. She was truly a help-meet for him, and was one of the best specimens of a good pastor's wife that Connecticut ever furnished. She did almost

On the 25th of Nov., 1832, the Church voted to extend a call to Rev. Cornelius C. Vanarsdalen, of Brunswick, N. J., to become their Pastor. The Society concurred, and offered him a salary of twelve hundred dollars. Mr. Vanarsdalen accepted the call, and was installed here on the 27th of Dec., 1832. Rev. Joel Hawes preached the installation sermon, which was published. After an uneventful ministry of about four years, Mr. Vanarsdalen was, at his own request, dismissed from his pastoral relation, March 22d, 1836.

In the month of May, 1836, the Rev. Wm. Patton, of New York, was unanimously and repeatedly invited to settle here, but his services were not secured.

In Feb., 1837, the Rev. O. E. Daggett was unanimously invited to become the Pastor of this church,^g and the sum of twelve hundred dollars annually was offered him as a salary. The call was accepted, with the understanding that the pulpit should be supplied by the Society five weeks in each year, should the Pastor desire it. Mr. Daggett was ordained and settled here, April 12th, 1837. An examination of the church catalogue suffices to show that the years of his ministry in this church were years of great in-gatherings to the fold of Christ.

The memorable revival of 1838 occurred meanwhile. "It came upon the churches like a gradual, mighty wave, not undesired or unsought, but unexpected, till it lifted us all and bore us up for some five months." None was ever more general and powerful in Hartford. That year this church received one hundred and fifty persons on profession of faith. Fifty-four of these were males. At the communion in the month of May, one hundred and ten persons joined the church by profession. There were also other, less remarkable, seasons of religious interest. In 1841, thirty were received by profession of faith, and at the communion in May, 1843, fifteen as much for the Lord as her devoted husband, and her memory is embalmed in the hearts of a large number of our citizens." Rev. Dr. Bruce, in the Religious Herald. Rev. Charles E. Linsley, a son of the former Pastor of this church, was with us in our anniversary, an honored guest.

^g Mr. Daggett began to preach here in June 1836, as a supply, and continued his services until his ordination, so that his actual ministry here was longer by one year than his pastorate proper.

were received. In the years between Mr. Daggett's ordination and dismissal, the whole number added to the church was three hundred and seven, of whom one hundred and fourteen were males; and the clear gain in numbers, over all removals, was one hundred and fifty-seven.

Previous to the year 1838, the only lecture room was the western part of the basement of the church. After the great revival, another "church-room" was neatly prepared and fitted up, just over the vestibule of the church, and directly in the rear of the choir gallery. It is difficult for us of to-day to comprehend how the unusually fruitful ministries of two such pastors as Dr. Linsley and Dr. Daggett, should have been so brief. But it is certain that in those days there was "an unhallowed leaven" in this society. A disagreeable if not evil spirit of discontent and faction was continually making mischief, and bringing discredit upon what, on the whole, was a living and faithful church. There was less growth in this district, at that time and for years after, than in any other part of the city. It languished in that kind of torpor and backwardness that always bring forth thorns and thistles. Then, as now, and ever, it was possible for a few unreasonable and restless people, to bring to nought the desires and devices of a great majority of sensible and earnest Christians.

In the summer of 1842, Mr. Daggett asked to be dismissed. As the church by an overwhelming majority declined to grant his request, he stood in his place another year, when, as he insisted on a dismissal, a Council was called, by whose action his pastoral relation was dissolved, June 23d, 1843.

Rev. O. E. Daggett was born in New Haven, Jan. 14th, 1810, graduated at Yale College in 1828, was ordained and installed in Hartford April 12th, 1837, was installed in the First Congregational Church in Canandaigua, N. Y., Jan. 30th, 1845, and in Yale College Church, Oct. 31st, 1867, where he still labors.

In Oct., 1843, Rev. Joseph H. Towne, of Boston, was called to the pastorate of this church, but without success.

In Nov., 1844, special endeavors were made to induce Rev. Adam Reid, of Salisbury, Conn., to settle here, but they were unsuccessful.

In April, 1845, Rev. Walter Clarke received an invitation to become the Pastor of this church. The call was accepted, and Mr. Clarke was installed, June 4th, 1845. Rev. Edward W. Hooker, of East Windsor, preached the installation sermon, Dr. Hawes made the installing prayer, Dr. Porter gave the charge to the Pastor, and Dr. Bushnell the right hand of fellowship.

In the spring of 1847, measures were taken to build a new Lecture-room. The chapel was dedicated on the evening of Sept. 14th. In the year 1853, extensive alterations and repairs of the church edifice were made, by which the audience room was considerably enlarged and improved, and put into substantially its present form and arrangement, although since that time, the building has been thoroughly renewed in its appearance both internally and externally.

Early in 1859, Mr. Clarke asked to be dismissed from his pastoral relation. His request was granted, and by the action of an Ecclesiastical Council, held in Hartford Jan. 28th, 1859, his dismissal was declared, to take effect on the 31st of Jan. Under his ministry of almost fourteen years, great changes occurred in this city. This South District began to show signs of unwonted growth and enterprise. In 1840 the population of Hartford (including East and West Hartford,) was about thirteen thousand. In 1860, the population of Hartford alone was nearly thirty thousand. There were several seasons of unusual religious interest during the ministry of Mr. Clarke. In 1852, fifty-five persons were received to the church on profession of faith. In the year 1858, sixty-three were admitted.

Rev. Walter Clarke, D. D., was born in Middletown, Conn., April 5th, 1812, was settled over the church in Canterbury, Comm., in May, 1841; was installed as Pastor in this church, June 4th, 1845; in Mercer St. church in New York city, February, 1859, and in the First Presbyterian Church in Buffalo, February, 1861. He is personally known to most, if not all the members of this congregation, and it is a chief matter of regret with us to-day, that we are deprived of his presence on this occasion.

In May, 1859, Mr. Charles D. Helmer was invited to become the Pastor of this church, but declined the invitation, as he had previously declined a similar invitation from the North Church.

In October of the same year the present Pastor received and accepted a call to settle here, but did not begin his labors until the new year. He was ordained and installed on the evening of Jan. 11th, 1860, Drs. Hawes, Clarke, Spring, and Harris, and Rev. Messrs. Burton, Webber, and Drummond of Springfield, participating in the services. Concerning him and his ministry in this church, another may, in due time, write. He counts it only too high an honor that he is permitted to stand in the line of so long and noble a succession of ministers as have, from the first, served God in this church, and, on this occasion, to bring into review and grateful celebration the names, and virtues, and labors of his godly predecessors.

The duty of writing the history of this ancient church was so clearly laid upon me by Providence, that not even the painful consciousness of unfitness could justify me in declining it. Whatever may be the degree of my success, I have certainly done my best, not to be interesting or entertaining on this occasion, but to search out and gather up whatever facts might serve my single purpose, into a plain and orderly narrative that should have, at least, the merit of thoroughness and accuracy, and so be, perchance, of some permanent value for the people of this parish.

One who comes across the continent from California by railroad, may not presume to give a comprehensive report of the diverse regions through which his narrow belt of travel runs. So, having followed one particular and narrow line of investigation, we have completed our journey over these tracts of time, two hundred years in breadth. Stopping here and there on the route for a moment only, and ever hurrying forward with all speed, as must needs be, only a scanty report, based on a very limited range of observation, can be made of the old-time country in general. That land of "The Long-Ago" is a pleasant land in which to sojourn for awhile. In its twilight solitudes all is still, and quiet, and restful, and a grateful sense of sacredness and mystery is shed abroad. All things are simple, quaint, and natural there. The ground is holy, for there are the living roots of all the wide-spreading prosperity of the present age, there are the graves of those holy and heroic men and women, by whose weary toils, and sacrifices, and sufferings, were sown in tears the precious seeds of all the wide-waving and golden harvest we are reaping with songs.

A kind of sweet converse have I had with the good and reverend men I have met in these old ways. From many a dim and quaintly written page they have smiled upon me, and I have learned a new honor for the fathers and forefathers. But be sure of this! The promised land has not been reached as yet! The Golden Age is yet to arrive! Coming down from the year 1670 to the present time, at every station on the road, there are to be seen new signs and splendid prophecies of progress. The unnatural, perhaps then inevitable union of church and state which was the source of most of the woes that afflicted the early colonial churches, has long since been sundered. What hard, and narrow, and poor conditions of life were suffered then! What privations, exposures, and ignorance abounded! Under the outward semblance of a compulsory religion, what sly and serious hypocrisies! Under a pernicious system of severe restraints, what mischievous eccentricities and abnormal types of character were developed! The people of those former days had their full share of strife, and vice, and sin, and suffering. The "good old times" were, after all, comparatively dark, dismal, undesirable times. Not only do we live in the midst of material comforts that make our world a new world and our life therein a new life, but we are in the enjoyment of an intellectual light, of a social welfare, and of a civil and spiritual freedom, of which the ancients never dreamed. As well as they we know what true religion is, and a thousand times better than they we know what it is not! Let us thank God and take courage. The fact of a church that is two hundred years old, that dates almost from the first settlement of a wilderness, representing at first the faith and hope of a feeble company of colonists, but living on from age to age as a continuous power for good, gradually gathering into its fold and embracing with its ministrations of mercy and comfort generation after generation, and amid all vicissitudes, still uplifting its holy psalms whose echoes float on in the past forever, touches both our imagination and veneration. Here is the consciousness of an organic life through which the spiritual and moral forces of the distant past act upon us and quicken us. Here dwell the subtle inspirations of holy memories and associations. Hence "the repose of history" is shed upon our present life. Amid all the revolutions and changes of two centuries, this church has stood unshaken, where its founders placed it, upon the broad and sure "foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." Without interruption the worship of God has been maintained, the old gospel of the cross preached, and the ordinances of the church administered in her sanctuaries. Pious hands have guarded and kept burning night and day the holy fire that, two hundred years ago, was kindled upon her altar. Dear, ancient Church! thou art compassed about with a great cloud of witnesses! God bless thee forever! Till the Son of Man shall come again in glory mayest thou stand secure on the old foundations, and thy light still shine more and more! We pray for thy peace, O our Jerusalem!

"Peace be within thy walls! prosperity within thy palaces!
 For my brethren and companions' sakes I will now say,
 Peace be within thee!"

FESTIVAL EXERCISES.

Tuesday evening had been set apart for social entertainment, and invitations had been given to all past and present members of the parish, and to guests from abroad, to be present. A bountiful collation was spread in the parlors of the church, and a score or two of the young ladies of the Society, dressed in the garments of their grandmothers, waited upon the table and served the throng of people with a liberality worthy of the good dames whose mantles they wore. In the upper room of the chapel an old-fashioned dinner table was spread, and the curiosities there displayed attracted universal attention and interest. There were vegetables of all kinds, gigantic doughnuts, pork and beans in a great iron pot, johnny cake baked in the "old testament" way, vast expanses of deep, rich pumpkin pie, immense loaves of rye-bread, and many other old time articles of diet. The utensils on the table were in keeping with the feast. There was the great pewter platter brought over by Theophilus Eaton, first Governor of New Haven colony,—a platter which puts to shame all modern crockery. There were pewter mugs and teapots, and some china ware two centuries old, candlesticks, spectacles, and inkstands, while hard by stood old spinning wheels, andirons, &c., &c. There was a large old family Bible of MDCLX—, the last part of the date having been torn away. This Bible is in the possession of Mrs. Julius Gilman, having been given to her by Mrs. Fanny Stedman, lately deceased. Mrs. Stedman was in the line of descent from Gov. Webster. This old Bible has been in the hands of the Webster family for over two hundred years. It is an interesting relic, and contains a curious map of the world. Several of the family have been sailors, and the old Bible has safely made several voyages.

Later in the evening the people gathered in the church, and after spending some time in the interchange of social greetings and congratulations, and in admiring the beautiful decorations, they took seats, and, led by the Pastor, enjoyed a delightful hour of singing. This was one of the unpremeditated but pleasantest parts of the whole celebration. Old and young sat down together in the freest possible way, and lifted up the songs of the church with an unction that is rare indeed. The spirit of God seemed to be sweetly present, and many hearts were moved and many eyes were moistened. About ten o'clock the people quietly dispersed, and the gathering so free, and delightful, and memorable in all respects, was ended.

It is not possible to describe such scenes, over which a delicate and indescribable charm hovers and floats, and the power of which every heart confesses. We felt ourselves encompassed by a great cloud of witnesses, we breathed in an atmosphere of love, and our songs seemed to come back to us in sweet responses from the world of long ago and from the world above. The home and family feeling was perfect and complete. Many former members of the church and parish were present, some of them aged men and women, and to them especially the house of God was as the gate of heaven.

On Wednesday morning, at 9½ o'clock, a prayer meeting of great interest was held in the Sunday School room, which was conducted by the Rev. T. L. Shipman of Jewett city, who formerly preached some months in the old South Meeting House. At half past ten o'clock an immense audience filled every nook and corner of the church edifice, to attend the re-union service. One of the chief attractions of this service was an old-fashioned orchestra of violins, bass viols, flutes, clarionetts, &c., &c., which had been gathered to lead a large chorus in singing the old tunes of long ago. The whole choir was under the direction of Mr. Irving Emerson, the organist of the church, who succeeded admirably in carrying out the ideas of the Pastor.

His Excellency, Marshall Jewell, the Governor of the State, and a member of this church, was expected to preside at this meeting, but at a late hour a telegram from New Haven announced his unavoidable detention there and his regrets. The Pastor conducted the exercises, and called upon the Rev. A. C. Adams of Wethersfield to offer prayer. Old "Invitation" was then sung:—

"Come, my beloved, haste away,
Cut short the hours of thy delay, &c."

After making a brief address, Mr. Parker read from the church records to the effect that in 1825, Joseph Webster was appointed delegate from this church to attend a Council in New Haven, called to examine and install the Rev. Leonard Bacon, and then introduced Dr. Bacon to the audience.

DR. BACON'S REMARKS.*

As I saw, last evening, those who wore what they considered to be obsolete styles of dress, I was touched with a feeling which made me realize how long it is since I was young. It seemed to me that I did not observe one costume that went back of my remembrance. Even the gentleman who wore the long-tailed coat seemed like an old acquaintance, for I remember well when young men came home from college with the long and narrow skirts of their coats hanging down behind them to the calves of their legs. The old-time costumes of those ladies, too, who thought they were arrayed in almost antediluvian fashions, seemed fresh as well as familiar. In a word, I was made to feel that my personal recollections run back to times which are now commonly considered quite remote. As I listened to the historical address yesterday, the greater part of that story of two hundred years seemed like a picture of events and times which I remember as a part of my own life. To my thought the period over which my personal memory ranges, has more of the world's progress in it, more true advancement of that kingdom which is not of this world but which is to subdue the world, than all the years that lie behind it since the year of our Lord 1670.

* The report herein given of this speech, and of the speeches that follow, does not profess to give much more than the substance of what was said by the distinguished gentlemen in their unwritten but eloquent remarks. They are correctly, but not fully reported.

It lacks five months of fifty-eight years since my first remembered view of Hartford,—then a beautiful village that proudly called itself a city. The State House, the Bank, and the North Meeting House (now called the Center Church), and here and there a venerable mansion, now long ago transferred to strangers, are almost all that remains of the Hartford that I then saw with rustic admiration. So long ago I remember the South Meeting House, standing, according to an old Connecticut fashion, in the middle of the street at the intersection of two roads, and closely resembling, within and without, any ordinary wooden meeting house built in the last century.

Not to weary you with merely personal recollections, I will venture to give out one thought connected with the Historical Discourse of yesterday, and illustrated by all the progress of the Congregational Churches in Connecticut, through conflicts and controversies, through storms and calms, and through the ebbs and flows of doctrine and of discipline. My thought is this:—Our Congregational churches, with all the mutual independency inherent in their organization, are one in the unity of their spiritual life, and in their strong tendency to fraternal intercommunion. With no external bond that may not be sundered in a moment, they are one ecclesiastical commonwealth through all the vicissitudes of their history. When Boston was not yet seven years old, and Hartford had hardly received its name, New England came near to being wrecked in a theological controversy on certain transcendental questions growing out of John Cotton's sublimated Calvinism,—a controversy in which a strong minded woman was the chief agitator, and in which therefore, though the question of woman suffrage was not raised, there was some foreshadowing of woman's rights. So sharp was the contention, that New England seemed on the verge of ruin ; but, under the providence of God, our infant churches and our infant commonwealths were rescued from that peril, partly at least, by the Pequot war, suddenly bringing them down from their "battle above the clouds" in the dimmest heights of theological speculation, to rough contact with the realities and duties of this "sublunar sphere." The controversy in which this Second Church in Hartford originated was of a different sort, ecclesiastical rather than theological,—a controversy incidental to the development of the Congregational church-polity, and to the adjustment of the relations between ecclesiastical order and the civil commonwealth. The troubles in the Hartford church, and the endeavors to suppress them, became the occasion of bringing out into discussion and controversy throughout New England, some serious questions on which comparatively latent diversities of opinion had existed from the beginning.

The story of those troubles so well narrated yesterday, illustrates one characteristic by which Connecticut was distinguished from the New Haven Colony. In Connecticut, the civil government was continually meddling with the churches, while in the New Haven Colony there was another arrangement. Old John Davenport had taken care, in the institutions which he founded, that there should be no chance for the State to govern the Church ; and when the great hope of his life had failed, and his little commonwealth had been absorbed by Connecticut, he said in his grief, that "in New Haven Colony, Christ's interest was miserably lost." He saw that the constant intermeddling of the State with church affairs, foretold the coming in of a system which he distinguished from strict and simple Congregationalism, by calling it the "parish way."

He had seen that parish way in Holland as well as in his native country, and he greatly preferred the "more excellent way," in which the New England Churches walked at the beginning.

The fact is that though all the earliest churches of New England were instituted on a Congregational platform, there was already a reaction, caused by influences that came from Old England. Indeed the habits of thinking that tended to such a reaction, came over in the great Puritan migration. The pioneer Pilgrims, who made their settlement at Plymouth two hundred and fifty years ago, were not mere Puritans, but Separatists. They had long before renounced the institution called the Church of England. They recognized no church organization superior to the free congregation of believing worshipers. The idea of a national church co-extensive with the jurisdiction of a nation, and having either Pope or King, or even a General Assembly, was preposterous in their view, and was repudiated as the very body and soul of anti-Christ. But when the great migration came over which founded Boston, ten years later, another element entered into the life of New England. The leading minds in that migration were simply Puritans, members of the reforming party in the national church.

Their separation from the church of England was identical with their separation from the soil of England. It is not strange that in that great migration there came into New England some ideas more congruous with the theory of a national church than with the theory which impelled the Pilgrims to separation from the ecclesiastical arrangements in their native country. Out of these shreds of the old world system came the reaction against simple Congregationalism. The troubles in the Hartford Church were somehow connected with that reaction. The personal and local difficulty spread out into a general controversy and discussion, and so the reaction went on, till the Synod which assembled in Boston in 1662, gave its approval, by a large majority, to the scheme afterwards known as the "half-way covenant."

What was the sequel? Did the churches of New England divide into two hostile sects? No! in a few years every church had come into the practice of "the half-way covenant," and the controversy between "Synodists" and "Anti-Synodists," was a thing of the past.

The churches went together. As there was no organic and governed unity, there was no place for organized disunion. For twenty years or more, the churches differed on a question, not of christian faith or christian morals, but of discipline and polity, and at last, not by any compact, but by the force of tendencies which neither party adequately understood, they were agreed in their practice.

In Connecticut the reaction against simple Congregationalism went very far. The name Presbyterian became the ordinary designation of our clergy and our churches, and there were those among the pastors who appear to have used that name, not heedlessly, but with an intelligent purpose.

In the days of the half-way covenant, whatever else was neglected, the baptism of children was well attended to. Looking into the records of an old church in Fairfield County, not very long ago, I saw something to this effect. The minister, in his old age, recorded his regret that he had not kept an accurate registry of baptisms, and therefore supplied that deficiency by certifying, once for all, that, according to his best knowledge and belief, everybody then living in the parish was baptized, except a few Indians in a remote corner.

The prevalence of a practice borrowed from the theory of national churches and incongruous with the spiritual christianity which is the vital force of Congregationalism, was at last arrested by what is commemorated in our traditions as "The Great Awakening," which had its distinct beginning under the ministry of Jonathan Edwards, at Northampton. As in similar awakenings, so in that there were enthusiasms and extravagances, mistakes both practical and theoretical, many human indiscretions, and much fanaticism, marring God's work.

Of course there was agitation and painful conflict—like the convulsive struggles that sometimes accompany the recovery of life in a case of suspended animation. Old topics in theology were reconsidered in new lights, and in those discussions, the underlying theology of the half-way covenant, and of all its outgrowth, was called in question. We can see how it happened that in the elaboration and gradual prevalence of the system which then went by the name of "New Divinity," the practice of the churches, admitting confessedly unregenerate persons to sacramental privileges, was gradually changed. The old notion, tacitly assumed and acted upon, was that if a man had learned the catechism, and was ready to bind himself by covenant to an outward conformity with the recognized standard of good morals, he had done all he could do, and as for any inward experience of religion he must patiently wait,—and that having done all he could, he might have the benefit of baptism for his children, and, whenever he desired it, the benefit of the Lord's Supper for himself. But the Great Awakening, with the theological discussions that followed it, brought in a very different view,—namely, that if a man to whom the Gospel has been preached is unregenerate in heart, his deficiency in that respect is not his misfortune but his fault. When Edwards, and the New England theologians of his school, had hammered out on the anvils of controversy their doctrine about the worthlessness of "unregenerate doings," and the sinfulness of unregenerate waiting, the practice of the half-way covenant gradually ceased in one church after another, and full half a century ago the last traces of it vanished.

Similar to this has been the story of other and later controversies. Differences of opinion have sometimes been accompanied with painful feelings of alarm, and have even expressed themselves in denunciation. But our characteristic freedom of thought and discussion makes no permanent division. Under the polity which substitutes the comity of the churches and their free communion with each other, in the place of a common government over the churches, parties are only temporary. Each of our controversies, ancient or recent, has had its stormy day, and then has been followed by a calm. The testimony of all these ages is that our churches, "distinct as the billows yet one as the sea," are held together in a vital unity safer and stronger than any outward bond of coercive authority.

I must not sit down without saying a few words concerning those deceased pastors in this church, whose persons and ministries I remember. When I first saw the old meeting house, the Rev. Abel Flint (afterwards, by the favor of Union College, Dr. Flint,) was performing his ministry here. His name was already venerable to me, for I had read it again and again in the Connecticut Evangelical Magazine, and it stands to-day written with his own hand on the title page of the pocket bible which he gave to my father setting out for his mission in the wilderness.

The first time I spoke to the majesty of Dr. Flint, was when I went to his house to be examined for admission to the Grammar School. He was one of the Trustees, and to him the office was no sinecure, for he often came to see how the school was going on, and to examine us in our Latin or Greek. The boys rather liked to see him come,—we liked his beaming face, and his sonorous voice, for there was evident kindness under his impressive dignity. He was a man whom nobody could meet on the pavement without taking particular notice of him. To see him marching up Main Street with his ivory-headed cane, in his clerical dress which was antique even then, would gladden the eyes of a modern Ritualist. I remember the black coat of a somewhat Quakerish cut, the black japanned buttons, the knee-buckles and shoe-buckles, the blue cloak too, that enveloped his stately figure in colder weather, and the broad-brim hat on the short, snow-white hair which, by contrast, made his smoothly shaven face seem more florid. We heard yesterday how critical was the time of his ministry here, and how successful he was, taking the church at a time when it was smaller than ever before, and leaving it larger than it had ever been before. He was more a man of culture than of genius, with a polished style of writing, with a graceful and impressive oratory, and with a perfect observance of all pulpit proprieties. He was fastidiously correct in his pronunciation, and his example in all doubtful words was considered authoritative. I remember that when Dr. Gallaudet returned from Europe, and the Asylum was about to be commenced, there was a great religious meeting, in what is now called the Center Church, to inaugurate the enterprise. On that occasion, from the lips of that accomplished and elegant speaker, I first heard the word deaf pronounced def. Evidently that was the accepted English pronunciation. (I am so old that I say deaf, and always shall.) But Dr. Flint was not too stiff to learn, and in his part of the services that evening, he was learning the new pronunciation. The phrase "deaf and dumb," came in of course, very frequently, and sometimes, inadvertently, he said deaf, and then when he thought of it, he said def. But from that time forward, I dare say, he always used the new pronunciation. The last time I saw him was when I happened to be here at the ordination of his successor. It could not but be in some respects a sad occasion to him, but he rejoiced in it. Well might he rejoice, leaving the church as he did, and longing for its prosperity in the future. Of all the men that I have known familiarly, it seems to me that Joel Harvey Linsley was most manifestly characterized by "godly sincerity,"—by christian simplicity, grave and sweet,—by kindness of spirit tempering a healthy abhorrence of whatever is mean and wrong,—by earnestness to do the Master's will,—by all spiritual graces adorning and sanctifying the native strength of a mind well disciplined in various studies. My first acquaintance with him was when he came to Andover, not long before his ordination, for a few weeks of study after his relinquishment of the legal profession, and from that time to the end of his long and ever busy life, I loved him. His pastorate here, though not a long one, was an eminent and timely blessing to this ancient church. Here may his memory ever shed a saintly fragrance!

At the close of Dr. Bacon's remarks, the old tune "New Jerusalem" was sung:—

"From the third heavens where God resides,
That holy happy place, &c.,"

The Pastor then introduced the Rev. O. E. Daggett, D. D., former Pastor of the church, of whose extremely interesting remarks only a brief and fragmentary report can be given.

DR. DAGGETT'S REMARKS.

He said though he was ordained pastor of this church in 1837, he came to Hartford in 1824. and was a school boy in the Hopkins grammar school preparatory to entering Yale College. He spoke of the early efforts alluded to by other speakers to take this church from orthodoxy, and said he had understood that there were in the congregation men who were rough and profane, yet who said that funds given for orthodoxy should not be given for anything else. He inferred from this that men who are not of the church, often feel more interest in it than they are sometimes willing to confess. It was thirty-four years ago when he yielded to a call of the church, though he had furnished a stated supply for several months before. The first time he came he heard Dr. Patten preach three times in one Sabbath, for the people in those days could hear three sermons as well as they can now hear one. It was not in this pulpit that he preached, but in the old mahogany affair, which has been cut down and is now used in the lecture room : and he wanted to put in a protest against these remodeled pulpits, in front of which no communion table is kept, probably for architectural effect, though he believed the symbols of the Lord's Supper should be kept in view. In those days he was on exceedingly pleasant terms with Dr. Hawes, with whom he often took long walks for exercise, and exchanged with him on such occasions, that a lady of his church once asked why it always rained when Dr. Hawes preached for him. He alluded to Dr. Linsley as a model pastor. Did you ever think that ministers have no pastors ? Oh, that they might always have some one on whom they could lean and in times of tribulation say, " Pray for me." This he enlarged somewhat upon in a touching manner, saying Dr. Linsley was just such a man as he would have for his pastor. Dr. Vanarsdalen, also a former pastor, was alluded to, as a child of impulse, whose course was clouded, yet a man of generous impulses, full of tenderness. When he, (the speaker) left the church it had 406 members, and of all of them, just five-eighths had become members during his pastorate. The whole number of admissions was 307, an average of 51 each year, and of these 218 were by profession. The season of his pastorate was one of fruitfulness, and it is noticeable that of the admissions to the church in 1838, one-half were baptized. During his ministry, 116 were baptized, an average of 17 a year. In May, 1838, 110 persons were added to the church on profession. He proceeded to give a very interesting account of the great revival of that year, when the spirit of God pervaded all the churches, and he mentioned the singular fact, that in five months while this revival lasted, there was not a case of serious sickness or one of death in the church, and in each one of the congregations God subsequently took one of the ingathered flock to himself.

At the close of these remarks, the old tune "Complaint" was sung :

"Spare us, O Lord, aloud we cry,
Nor let our sun go down at noon, &c.,"

Rev. Horace Bushnell, D.D., was then introduced, and spoke briefly, as follows :

DR. BUSHNELL'S REMARKS.

Recollections appear to be the kind of contributions most demanded here, and most naturally given, as they are certainly most appropriate to the occasion ; but I have none to give. My friend, Dr. Bacon, thought he could remember a good part of these two centuries, but I am so much older than he, that I don't remember anything. I have an indistinct recollection that when I came in hither, as a boy, to get sight of so great a city, I saw the old wooden Meeting House standing out, hereabouts, in the street, but whether it was a whole thousand years back, I would not trust my memory to say.

As brother Parker went on yesterday in the faithfully recited story of his Discourse, picturing the stormy times of our church fathers in their little, new-born, scarcely settled community, and showing out of what contentions, embittered by what asperities, this Second Church took its separate form and began a history of its own, I could but say, “this is their Book of Judges,”—shewing how Israel, just planted and not yet settled in any terms of order, fell backward into comparative anarchy, how their manners and moralities ran low, and how the joints of society were loosened for a fearful lurch towards barbarism.

It reminded me sharply as need be of what I once undertook to show, under “Barbarism the first Danger,” for a text;—that there is a transitional age in the history of every new people, commonly in the second or third generations, when they wear a sadly deteriorated look. But there is a recovery shortly, and the barbaric excesses of the Judges give way to the finely advanced, new era of Samuel and David. So it has been in all our New England communities, and so it shortly began to be here, as the story was given, in our wretchedly distracted church community of Hartford. But God mercifully bridged the gulf for us, and finally brought us safe over out of a troubled past into a goodly present, where order took the ascendent again;—permitting us to dwell in peace, behold the decencies, and share the amenities, and take confidence in the recovered moralities of life. And having thus come up out of our rough, wild age, and the dangers included in so great poverty and coarseness of life, how shall we better thank God, than to ask how we may best turn off another danger, on the other side, from our children,—how we may save them from being precipitated into the fearfully worse dangers of luxury, dissipation, godless unbelief, and profligacy.

Just a word now in regard to the unmentioned people of the story.

Our brother Moore, referring, in the prayer meeting this morning, to the large gaps in the church records which the Historical Discourse deplored, reminded us that whole generations in the membership were thus lost; who they were and where their dust reposes never can be known. But if we had their names, scarcely more would be known. The body of Moses,—where was it laid? And if his name too had been hidden as his body was, would he not still have lived in his people by all his works? So these unmentioned ones of your church-story are living in you here to-day,—as truly they that were in the gaps of the records, as they whose names are preserved. These names tell you little, and it is only a very few of them, four or five in a generation, that ever come out to be so much as spoken by their syllables. And yet all these unmentioned, or scarcely mentioned ones are yet truly alive, so much even as they once were here, and for one, I love especially to give them greeting at such times; for it is their special merit, it may be,—their self-forgetting and unforward modesty—that has veiled them. And what more could their names signify, when all they did and were is alive in you, now waiting to be owned and cherished by your tenderest homage?

Another point is to be remembered :—Considering the fact that our generations increase in a geometrical ratio, there are probably now as many as one or two hundred thousand people somewhere living, that were issued from this flock, and who, as you may say, were born here, though they know you not. Some of them never heard of this South Church, but they have South Church ingredients in them, that for these generations past have been distilling from such works and prayers as could fitly be a propagated blessing.

Put now these last unmentioned and the unmentioned of the old time together, and imagine how they will sometime meet, and how you yourselves will meet them as the before and after of your story! When you all stand face to face in this great time coming, what a bringing together will it be! You will make how many beautiful discoveries, that will put your hearts ringing with joy, and it will be a gathering together into what high brotherhood of love and acknowledged obligation for eternity!

Mr. Parker then, in a few words, returned thanks to all who have contributed in any way to the perfect success of the anniversary exercises; to the multitudes who have come up hither to our jubilee; to the people who have labored so devotedly and patiently to make all suitable preparations for this

O Lord, Bless Thy People, And Save Thy Heritage :
Govern Them And Lift Them Up Forer :
Day By Day We Magnify Thee,
And Praise Thy name Ever,
World Without End,
Amen.
